OPENHOUSE LONDON

Opening Eyes, Minds and Doors

Free access to the Capital's great architecture

OPENHOUSE

Open House is an architecture education charity

Introduction

London is constantly changing and it has always been my belief that we should all aim to participate and influence emerging patterns of change rather than resist them.

Of course, this prompts all kinds of questions and issues. To what extent, for example, must change be done to us and for us rather than by means of consultation and active engagement? How can community meaningfulness and value be fostered in terms of the architecture we build? And, of course, what do we mean by such words? How are the decision-makers who act on our behalf to know 'good' from 'bad', to appraise and judge the daunting matter of what ought to be and what ought not to be allowed?

Such questions prompt Open House programmes and projects which, on the one hand, constantly seek to unlock potential. On the other hand, we are searching for ways to make that potential beneficial for as many people as possible: to make London a better city as well as a changing one.

It is against this background that we offer you 17 and 18 September 2005 – a celebratory event despite recent tragedies. We hope to provide pleasure and even entertainment, but overall our aim is to furnish you with the language, tools and – above all – the experience that will both encourage and enable your active voice in the making of London. It is on this basis and with these aims that we turn to London as a living resource without equal.

The Open House London event is one way we do this. Others include the London Exemplar programme for London Councillors, our Learning by Design Exemplar publication for the educational establishment and the My City Too! campaign. As always, the September event is our most salient and open invitation to you – to ordinary Londoners of every persuasion – to become involved, to enter through a wide variety of open doors representing who we are in all our cultural diversity.

Voice of London

It's very hard to see London. We see it every day. But we don't really SEE it. We rush round in a daze, head in the paper, clamped to a mobile, without once stopping to gawp at, well, London. The city seems almost designed to encourage this blindness. There are few spots to break free from London's claustrophobia, its sprawling mess. Its infrastructure is labyrinthine; we have few grand vistas, few hills and our skyscrapers are mostly locked to all but bankers. No wonder Wordsworth rhapsodised on Westminster Bridge. The Thames is one of the few spaces you can ever take a breath and really see the place in which you live.

One of my heroes is the early 20th century eccentric Scottish polymath Patrick Geddes, who, aside from being a social reformer, biologist, conservationist, Scottish nationalist, community activist and possessor of magnificent eyebrows, also found time for architecture. He built a building in Edinburgh – The Outlook Tower – to help people really look at the city, and themselves, afresh. He was passionate about civic values, what the government today calls respect, citizenship. Architecture, he thought, was where it all came together. If you wanted a humane society, full of humane, active citizens rather than hoodies, you had to give them a humane, inclusive environment. Obvious really. People knew who they were, by knowing where they were. Get people to see, understand and love where they lived, and you're halfway towards changing the place, the person and the nation for the better.

This is exactly the spirit behind Open House. Its logo – a key – is perfectly chosen. London's beauty always needs unlocking; not just on its now world renowned weekend when architectural treasures are opened for all, but through Open House's activities 365 days a year. One hundred years since Geddes' day, and we are finally beginning to see. Today we love and understand our spaces better than ever. But, as Geddes understood, it's about more than just aesthetics. It's about belonging. Open House gets you to look at your city, then go out and change it.

Up close and personal

Experiencing architecture is about sampling the real thing!

Explore buildings, ask questions, form opinions and enjoy new experiences.

Meeting

Meet the Makers is your chance to hear direct from the teams that design, construct and regenerate Londoners' environments. Look out for the code M on entries which indicates that architects or engineers will be there to give their professional expertise, leading tours or giving talks – sometimes project team members for that building; for instance check out what Muf Architects have to say about their landscape design at Camden Arts Centre (see p15). Visiting the architects and engineers at their studios also offers enthusiasts the chance to speak directly to the Makers.

Debating

Hundreds of professionals and enthusiasts volunteer their time over the weekend as architectural Guides and Stewards. All of them have one thing in common: they love architecture and are keen to help visitors make the most of their experience. Look out for them at Open House sites.

Listening

Meet the Commissioners – Talking to those responsible for commissioning new buildings offers a valuable insight into the process; the Director of the National Gallery (see p60) and the Executive and Artistic Director who led the refurbishment project at Wigmore Hall (see p63) will be on hand to answer questions.

Interpreting

Archi-info sheets are available at most sites and this information also adds to Open House explorers' knowledge-base. Much of the archi-info is also available on the website.

Seeing is Believing

Looking up at buildings as you walk past is a great way to start your exploration. Inside, thinking about the materials, space definition, decoration and purpose are all good places to start. Lastly, take in the architecture for yourself. Compare and contrast different buildings; consider first impressions and lasting impressions; think about the feel of a whole building; how do the textures and materials add or detract from the design; how much enjoyment do you derive from it. Consider why it's important to be involved in the debate on London's past, present and future.

To continue the debate year-round check out some resources on p70.

Unlocking the debate

“Open House London is a fantastic opportunity to marvel at our present-day city... and imagine the possibilities for its future. When the Olympic Games comes to London in 2012, it will herald new icons for London and the East End in particular.”

Jude Kelly, Chair of Culture and Education at London 2012

Future London

The OpenSite initiative developed in association with the Association for Consultancy and Engineering Progress Network, enables the public to view future London by visiting some of the major projects still under construction. Over 3,000 Londoners visited major construction sites during last year's Open House London event and learned about the role of engineering and construction in shaping the fabric of the capital.

Terminal 5, Heathrow (p35) are offering a comprehensive look at the ongoing work on Europe's largest construction programme. A preview of the major renovation at Unilever House (p22) offers a perspective on the complexities of rebuilding within a listed landmark structure.

Regeneration and rehabilitation

These are both key issues shaping the future of our city and their significance is reflected in the Open House London programme. We are interested in the redevelopment of the Thames Gateway as preparation for the confirmed 2012 Olympics and the knock on effect on East London which is already highly visible – from Queen Mary College's landmark buildings, to the Mayor's planned 100 new London Squares including Dalston's regenerated Gillott Square, to the re-use of existing historical buildings to make them relevant to their community such as the New Heart for Bow Project. In South London check out Goldsmith College's new Visual Arts building which has made a splash on the local skyline.

Unlocking the debate

Sustainability

Sustainable communities are all about the buildings making up the local scape and the surrounding urban design, raising a community's quality of life. Sustainable communities are both environmentally and socially responsible, and they can address the housing deficit and social housing issues that face our city today. Check out exemplary high density housing developments both old and new— the pioneering 1930s Kensal House and its nursery and Peabody Estate's Priory Green Estate and Barons Place. New community buildings also act as an area's focal point, from the Sure Start nurseries to other facilities such as the eco-friendly Paradise Park and Grass Roots.

Ecologically sound building ensures we can sustain our material resources and responsibly regenerate the city. Angell Town Estate in Lambeth exemplifies regenerated housing estates including buildings using sustainable principles. And structural engineers have a great role introducing eco-thinking to buildings; Alan Conisbee and Associates demonstrate their commitment at their offices, and see probono low-tech engineering work-in-progress by Buro Happold engineers at Strawbale Teahouse, both on the Sponge trail (see p41).

Learning by design

As we all know from our own experience, schools are unique environments, and this year Open House London is showcasing a selection of the newly designed exemplars in our city.

See how architects have responded to the challenge of designing welcoming, open and stimulating places for teaching and learning. Primary and secondary schools – including examples of Classrooms of the future, Special Schools, Early Years Centres and Community Learning Centres – will be opening up, providing an opportunity to hear at first hand the views of the heads and students as well as the architects from practices including Foster and Partners, Alsop Architects, Future Systems, Gollifer Langston and Feilden Clegg Bradley.

To support this Open House is publishing a booklet, funded by the Department for Education and Skills, featuring these buildings with details of the brief and consequent design, as well as insights from headteachers, students and governors into how their building works for them.

If you would like to receive a copy, please see our website www.openhouse.org.uk

“Well designed buildings make an important contribution to teaching and learning...the government is committed to encouraging inspirational school designs which meet our pupils needs”

Tune in & turn up

Every year on the Robert Elms show on BBC London 94.9 FM, we focus on the amazing architectural extravaganza, which is Open House, and every year it just gets bigger and better. More people visiting more buildings, queues snaking round the great monuments, die-hard fans spending entire weekends devoted to dashing from one design treat to the next. Open House is a celebration of our rich architectural heritage, from the medieval to the modern, the grandiose to the domestic, the sacred to the secular, but also a recognition of the incredible, popular interest in the inside of buildings.

Open House weekend is a wonderful opportunity to explore the extraordinary variety of architectural and interior design in this city, to see beyond the facades of buildings, which are usually firmly closed to us all. Peering inside City Hall with its fantastic spiral staircase, or riding the British Airways London Eye with its superlative views over the ever-changing city, is an experience to remember. But there is also a lot to learn and enjoy from the more humble buildings, which we would usually walk past without a second glance. Open House makes us look again at our built environment, makes us appreciate the treasures which surround us all.

In the run up to Open House London, several other events will build your appetite for exploring architecture in different ways. Some are listed in the Buildings by Area pages of the programme, but here are a few additional highlights.

Architecture by Night 16 September

For the first time this year, key buildings will be open at night for walkers to visit as part of the Metro Life Hike (see inside front cover for registration details). Hikers will be inspired by London's architecture-by-night along the route as well as enjoying special access to City Hall, HM Treasury, Guildhall, Gibbs Building – Wellcome Trust and Custom House. If the 17 mile Hike is too daunting, enthusiasts can still support the fund-raising campaign by obtaining a Supporter's Building Ticket.

See www.openhouse.org.uk for further details or call the Hotline 09001 600 061 (£60p per minute)

Span Talk & Exhibition 16 September

Venue: Margaret Howell, 34 Wigmore Street, London W1. Tel: 020 7009 9009

Exhibition: 30 August – 17 September.
10am – 6pm (7pm Thursdays) closed on Sunday.

Talk: Thursday 15 September at 7pm.

Fashion designer Margaret Howell hosts an exhibition and talk about Span housing, reflecting her interest in post-war British design.

Speakers at the talk are Ivor Cunningham, Span architect; Neil Bingham, Span resident, writer and historian and Patrick Ellard, Span resident, design and architectural lecturer.

A Span house at Fieldend, Twickenham will be open during Open House London event (see page 50).

Tickets for the talk are free, but pre-booking is required through www.openhouse.org.uk

Celebrating London's

Admission is free for all Open House London events on 17 – 18 September

Along with a brief description and the name of the architect, each building's entry contains its address, opening days and hours, access to visitors, pre-booking details where relevant, amenities and transport. Bus numbers are listed at the end

ENTRY

Open House London is a free event in which all sections of the community are invited to participate. This is in line with Open House's equal opportunity policy. Please note that each building's opening, security arrangements and refusal of entry are controlled by their owners. Open House cannot accept responsibility for any variation from the details published here.

ACCESS INFORMATION

This year Open House is working in partnership with Artsline, the disability information service, to provide an online access information service for the event. Where buildings have supplied this information, the Artsline team can answer simple access queries thereby insuring that visitors can prepare for a successful and enjoyable visit. www.artslineonline.com or 020 7388 2227.

This Guide is available in large print and electronic formats by emailing admin@openhouse.org.uk

PRE-BOOKING

Entry to a few of the properties will require you to book in advance through the building and contact details are given. Bookings administered by Open House are indicated. For these ONLY participants must visit our website www.openhouse.org.uk and go to "Useful Information" for details of how to pre-book.

NOTE: pre-booking is only open from 15 August – 15 September unless otherwise stated.

Meetings with buildings

Through the door and under the skin

Meet with the thing...

...introduce yourself...

...engage in small talk...

...is this somehow the real thing...?

It may sound eccentric, but it is sometimes useful to go to a building as if one were to meet with the thing itself rather than anyone who might live or work there.

Imagine you were to metaphorically introduce yourself – silently, of course; one wouldn't want to alarm anyone – and engage in a casual discourse and gentle interrogation. One has to presume the thing is animated and to inquire about its character, its personality traits, its essential reasons for being and how these have been dealt with and expressed by the architect.

As with meeting a real person, you will probably leap to a quick initial judgement. This is inevitable. But you might then engage in small talk by perambulating around the place (what used to be called an architectural promenade) in order to familiarise yourself with the disposition of parts, the principal features, the ways in which they are used, and so on. Does the architecture celebrate itself in the manner of its interplay with those who live with it? Is its character poorly or well formed? Does it offer pretence or substance? Is this somehow the real thing (whatever that is), or does it come back with a hollow note to one's knocking on the door?

It is at this point that you may well find your initial appraisal being either confirmed or – as often happens – amended. It may be a more interesting building than one at first supposed; alternatively, it may turn out to be more dreary and considerably less interesting than its jaunty nature and the build-up of prior reports led one to believe.

And, somewhere midst this small adventure, you might find that something even more odd happens: that you feel you have somehow, momentarily, met the elusive but essential thing itself. (Best not to tell anyone!) No doubt this will be a fleeting exchange, as if one's attentions to the mute beast were, surprisingly, met with a response. Hi, I'm here! And then it's gone. On the other hand, the whole thing might escape you altogether; or there might be nothing there. Either way, you have to pay attention.

Find the right architect for your project

The best way to choose your architect is to contact the RIBA. We have a department dedicated to finding the right architect, whatever the scale of the project.

We will search our database of over 4,000 practices and provide you with a shortlist of architects relevant to what you need.
Call RIBA Client Services on 020 7307 3700 for details.

If you want to compile the list yourself, you can search the same directory online at www.ribafind.org where you can also request a tailored shortlist from us.

RIBA Awards – for excellence in architecture

Since 1966, the RIBA has given awards for excellence in architecture. Some of the winning buildings are open this weekend as part of London Open House and are marked in the catalogue.

The winners show that good architecture is seen in single houses and work on existing buildings as well as major, new buildings. Equally, good architecture is delivered by small and large practices alike. The 6,700 RIBA Architects in the London area range from international companies to one or two person practices.

Buildings designed by architects can make a positive difference to the world around us. The RIBA exists to demonstrate this through practical examples of good design and is supporting London Open House to help achieve this.

The RIBA in London also hosts events for children and stages exhibitions and conferences, all to improve our local built environment. More information is on our website.

Open House in action

Direct experience of London's architecture is a catalyst for all Open House initiatives.

Open House constantly pushes boundaries to unpack architecture and the urban environment for current decision-makers as well as future generations.

Initiatives for 2005 include:

LONDON EXEMPLAR – programme for councillors from London's planning committees. Supported by CABE

TRAINING & PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT for teachers and architects

MY CITY TOO! a 3-year campaign to present a young people's manifesto for the built environment to the London Mayor

OPEN UP 2005 – using contemporary architecture to develop design skills and creative thinking for secondary school children

SMART ARCHITECTURE – looking at future technology and materials in architecture and engineering. Supported by International Design Consultancy Arup

The weekend's over... but your involvement doesn't stop here!

Open House London gets under the skin of the Capital and its architecture – we are gathering a whole range of insights and impressions which will contribute to the dialogue about London's future.

Please take a few moments to tell us about your Open House London. The questions are broad and are meant to be interpreted. By participating you may win a free copy of 'London's Contemporary Architecture: A Visitor's Guide'.

1. Did you research the buildings before you visited?

2. What is the value for you of looking at architecture?

3. What surprised you about your encounter with London's architecture?

4. How did you gain more knowledge about the buildings during your visit?

5. What's your wish for London's future development?

6. Are you involved in London's future, and if so, how?

Maggie's join forces with Open House to raise funds to build London's first cancer caring centre

Both Maggie's and Open House salute the remarkable difference that thoughtful architecture can make to the lives of people affected by cancer.

"Architecture and art play a vital role in Maggie's Centres" said project architect and Maggie's supporter Richard Rogers.

The two charities have come together to highlight the importance of good design within our Capital. To raise funds for the first Maggie's Centre in London Maggie's and Open House have organised a 17-mile sponsored hike, overnight, overground along the route of the Circle Line on 16th September 2005. The hike will pass some of London's most spectacular architecture and hikers will have exclusive night time access to buildings including The Guildhall, City Hall, HM Treasury, Gibbs Building Wellcome Trust and Custom House on the night before Open House London weekend. In addition, if you are not hiking you can still support the fund-raising campaign by obtaining Supporter's Buildings Tickets (see page 6 for details).

"Maggie's is the one place where I don't feel as if I should 'pull myself together' and behave as if cancer doesn't have an effect on me."

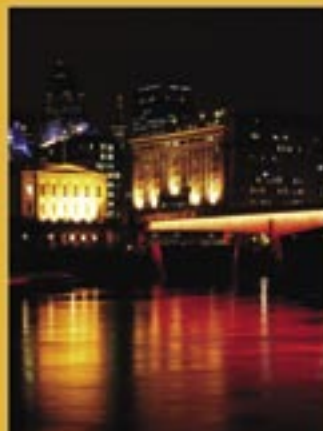

Janet McDonald King – treated for bowel cancer

The use of Maggie's Centres is free to all and offers help for those dealing with cancer of all types. Maggie's understands how hard cancer is, and the value of facing it with confidence. Good design is instrumental in creating the right atmosphere at Maggie's but the Centres are not just about the design. Maggie's Centres provide much needed practical and emotional and psychological support for those with cancer, their families, friends and carers. From the very moment following diagnosis, Maggie's Centres fulfil a unique service helping everyone to cope and understand cancer.

Maggie's Cancer Caring Centres have launched a campaign to raise funds needed to build Maggie's London, the charity's first London centre. The London Centre, being built on land donated by Hammersmith NHS Trust, has been designed by award-winning architect Richard Rogers.

By organising this overnight hike Maggie's is another step closer to providing a 'one stop shop' of cancer services in London, where 150,000 are living with cancer at anyone time. By joining forces with Open House Maggie's will become a reality helping people to build a life beyond cancer.
