INTRODUCTION

350,000 visits to 600 buildings in just 48 hours

It's hard to believe this year marks the 14th anniversary of Open House London as 2006 promises to be as fresh and insightful of the capital's architecture as ever before. On 16 & 17 September, 600 buildings across the capital will be opening their doors to the public for free. A quarter of these will be opening up for the very first time. Many more are normally off limits.

The aim of the weekend is to highlight the value of good design and encourage everyone to identify with and take pride in our city's wealth of architecture. Experiencing a building in the flesh – inside and out – can help us understand it, appreciate it, critique it. Thoughtful building design makes a remarkable difference to the lives of people across London. The London of the future will be a better place if people feel they own the city enough to really engage in design debate.

As an architecture education charity, Open House undertakes many other projects as well as the Open House annual event.

These include the London Exemplar programme for London Councillors, our Learning by Design Exemplar publication for the educational establishment and the My City Too! campaign. As always, the September event is our most salient and open invitation to you – to ordinary Londoners of every persuasion – to become involved, to enter through a wide variety of open doors representing who we are in all our cultural diversity.

CITY VOICES

Mayor of Barcelona

When I was invited to be on Open House's board of Supporters at Large I was delighted to have the opportunity to champion a city that has many parallels with my own. As Mayor of Barcelona I have done much to promote excellence in architecture and design in the city, very much as Open House seeks to do in London – most significantly with the annual Open House London event. One only has to look to the urban transformation in Barcelona with the '92 Olympics to see the comparison. Fourteen years later London faces similar challenges in its planning for the London 2012 Olympic Games and Paralympic Games. Clearly 1992 was a significant year for architecture – not only did it give birth to our Olympics but was also, I understand, the founding year of the Open House event!

The Barcelona '92 Olympics brought about change that went much further than was strictly needed to carry out the Games. It formed part of an urban renewal strategy that not only involved the whole of the city but considered its future reputation throughout the world. The '92 Olympics also helped the citizens of Barcelona to take renewed pride in the city around them, in both its historic and contemporary architecture. In the same way Open House invites Londoners to open their eyes to their own built environment. I am certain that the 2012 Games will also help them to do the same in the future.

Tune in & turn up

Every year on the Robert Elms show on BBC London 94.9 FM, we focus on the amazing architectural extravaganza that is Open House, and every year it just gets bigger and better. More people visiting more buildings, queues snaking round the great monuments, die-hard fans spending entire weekends devoted to dashing from one design treat to the next. Open House is a celebration of our rich architectural heritage, from the medieval to the modern, the grandiose to the domestic, the sacred to the secular, but also a recognition of the incredible, popular interest in the inside of buildings. Open House weekend is a wonderful opportunity to explore the extraordinary variety of architectural and interior design in this city, to see beyond the facades of buildings, which are usually firmly closed to us all. Peering inside City Hall with its fantastic spiral staircase, or riding the British Airways London Eye with its superlative views over the ever-changing city, is an experience to remember. But there is also a lot to learn and enjoy from the more humble buildings, which we would usually walk past without a second glance. Open House makes us look again at our built environment, makes us appreciate the treasures which surround us all.

UP CLOSE AND PERSONAL

Experiencing architecture is about sampling the real thing, in the flesh.

Explore buildings, ask questions, form opinions, and learn one thing you didn't know before!

The chat

Meet the architects that help shape Londoners' environments. Look out for the code 'A' on entries showing that architects will be on site to give their professional expertise, leading tours or giving talks, sometimes project team members for that building; for instance check out Hallfield School on p60 or the Idea Store on p55. Visit the architects at their studios and hear about current projects from the professionals. You never know, they might learn something from you too!

The facts

Thousands of professionals and enthusiasts volunteer their time and knowledge as architectural Guides and Stewards. Look out for them at Open House sites. Archi-info sheets are available most places and tell you what you need to know about that building. Knowledge is power!

"I participate in the event to learn more about a city I spend a lot of time in, and to develop public awareness of architecture and the built environment by sharing my enthusiasm and love of the city"

Volunteer

The view

Look up, look down, look out...ultimately the most you can discover about a building is by experiencing it in the flesh. Consider its best and worst features, its impact on you and its surroundings, is it a good neighbour and if not why not and does it matter anyway, has it got its eco-hat on, would you want to live or work in it, is it beautiful or muscular or just plain interesting, does it serve its purpose ...this is just a start but you get the idea!

Over to you...

ENGINEERING MATTERS

“Open Site provided us with a unique forum to interact with those who use, live near and invest in our buildings, or those who are simply interested in contemporary construction.”

Stanhope plc

Open House Open Site

A unique opportunity to glimpse first hand the future fabric of the Capital by visiting major developments and regeneration projects under construction. From commercial developments in the West at White City (p31) to the much-lauded Olympic site in the East (p48), with office developments in between including the tallest tower under construction in the City, discover the excitement and opportunities presented by engineering and construction. Rehabilitation of other landmarks also feature at Royal Festival Hall (p45) and The O₂ in Greenwich (p27). Project team members will be on hand to help you visualise the end result.

Check out the Open House Open Site web page on www.openhouse.org.uk for full details of the programme.

Open House Open Site is a partnership between Open House and ACE's Progress Network (a network for young professionals, under 35, working in the built and natural environment).

Meet the Makers

Arup engineers will reveal the 'Tall Storeys' behind some of the City's buildings (p22), or you can take a floating tour down the Thames instead to listen to some 'River Storeys' (p27). Kids with an interest in engineering should check out the 'Engineering Extravanzas' structures and demonstration activities at Leadenhall market (p22).

You can also meet the makers at the Open House Open Site construction sites and at several of the contemporary Open House buildings featuring tours by the engineering teams that designed the buildings to stand up in the first place! Look out for the code 'E' on entries for 'In Situ' engineers.

Engineering Elsewhere...

Check out the trips through Brunel's Thames tunnel on p52 and a walk around Brunel's Paddington on p64, and see Bazalgette's Crossness Pumping Station on p12. Sustainable architecture and engineering can be spotted on the Sponge trails of Open House buildings (p41).

DESIGN MATTERS

Where to start

It is hard to know where to start your architectural explorations but here are a few ideas...if you are interested in current hot-topics regeneration and placemaking why not head East to the award-winning Donnybrook (p55) or The Hub (p48). For sustainable living visit BedZED (p54) or some of the smaller houses built with an eco-ethos. If you are looking for tips on how to build on the awkward brownfield sites that seem to be left around the city then you might check out an example of a solution in Peckham (p52) or Camden (p16). Then there are the historical gems and modernist classics such as the Finsbury Health Centre (p40), award winners including Southwark's Siobhan Davies Dance Studios and Unicorn Theatre (p53), and everything else you can imagine in between!

Learning by Design

As we all know from our own experience, schools are unique environments and today how and where we are learning is rapidly changing. For the second year, Open House London is showcasing a selection of the newly designed exemplars in our city.

See how architects have responded to the challenge of designing welcoming, open and stimulating places for teaching and learning. Primary and secondary schools – including examples of Classrooms of the future, Special Schools, Early Years Centres and Community Learning Centres – will be opening up, providing an opportunity to hear at first hand the views of the heads and students as well as the architects.

A Learning by Design publication funded by the Department for Education and Skills, is available through our website www.openhouse.org.uk.

“The old building was out of date and depressing. The corridors were narrow, dull and dark – now the school is totally transformed – it’s a fantastic learning environment.”

Janice Baawa 15years

SPOTLIGHT

Within the main programme there are several other events which will build your appetite for exploring architecture in different ways, including a Habitat/V&A architecture bus-tour, special talks by renowned architects such as Adjaye Associates on the new Bernie Grant Centre in Tottenham, and FAT on their new Croydon gallery. Some are in the Buildings by Area pages of the programme: look out for the hot pink boxes! Here are a few other highlights:

Architecture by Night

15 September

Open House and Maggie's are teaming up for the second year running to create a fundraising event with a difference... Metro Life Hike 2006.

A 17 mile night-time sponsored hike following the circle line route...taking in dinner in the Guildhall, visits to The Wellcome Trust Gibbs Building, The Royal Geographical Society, a lightshow at the Argentine Ambassador's Residence, HM Treasury, City Hall, and last but not least, a night-time flight on the London Eye.

All this...and back to the Guildhall in time for breakfast.

INFORMATION & GETTING AROUND

ADMISSION IS FREE FOR ALL OPEN HOUSE LONDON EVENTS ON 16 – 17 SEPTEMBER.

Along with a brief description and the name of the architect, each building's entry contains its address, opening days and hours, access to visitors, pre-booking details where relevant, amenities and transport. Bus numbers are listed at the end.

Entry

Open House London is a free event in which all sections of the community are invited to participate. This is in line with Open House's equal opportunity policy. Please note that each building's opening, security arrangements and refusal of entry are controlled by its owners. Information in this guide is provided by contributors. Open House cannot accept responsibility for any variation from the details published here.

Access Information

This year Open House is working in partnership with Artsline, the disability information service, to provide an online access information service for the event. Where buildings have supplied this information, the Artsline team can answer simple access queries thereby insuring that visitors can prepare for a successful and enjoyable visit.

OPEN HOUSE WEBSITE

The website builds on the information you see in this guide.

There are interactive searches for period of architecture, type of building, name of architect or geographical location, together with 'Journey Planner' route-planning, all through an amazing map-based interface, developed with Transport for London.

Journey Planner – Web

To plan your Open House travel, visit Transport for London's (TfL) Journey Planner at tfl.gov.uk/journeyplanner.

Journey Planner incorporates live travel information to give you the quickest route.

You can also select preferred modes of transport with options that include wheelchair accessibility and walking.

Journey Planner – Mobile

During the event, TfL's TEXT Journey Planner service can help you plan the quickest routes while on the move. All you need to do is send a text with the buildings' postcodes to 60835 which is charged at your network operator's standard rate. For example, text: SW1A 2AH to SE12AA.

You'll then get a FREE text back with the journey details. Find the full postcodes listed in this guide and at www.openhouse.org.uk.

From building to building with Good Going

Once you have reached your destination, why not try taking a walk between buildings with one of the new 'Good Going' local mapguides, taking in walkable trails in five London boroughs. Collect your mapguides from local libraries and participating buildings. See www.openhouse.org.uk or www.goodgoing.co.uk for further details.

MEETINGS WITH BUILDINGS

Refreshing the parts other creative disciplines can't reach

London has been described as 'an eccentric mess' and, one admits, self-evident orderliness is not this metropolis' principal architectural quality. But what a wonderful admixture of individual works one can find within such a 'mess'.

No doubt, like most of the city's inhabitants, you know it as a select patterning of places and spaces, of friends and associates, interwoven robustly. The rest is a comparative mystery. It is this pattern which the annual Open House event invites you to fracture, to adventurously penetrate new territories and explore what London offers on this special and all too brief Autumn weekend.

The uniqueness of these two days is the invitation to enter through normally closed doors, to glimpse into otherwise private realms: commodious focal points in other people's lives, whether private or corporate, magnanimously laid open to all and sundry.

Perhaps you already have a list. You possibly enjoy particular interests – perhaps a determination to get into what you missed last year! Perhaps the Guide will be a late night text to peruse, to winkle out those special places off from which you can construct your own itinerary. You might even be giving up significant opportunities to take up the role of Steward or Guide in order to facilitate the pleasures of other enthusiasts.

In whatever manner you meet with participating buildings you will, no doubt, find yourself addressing a mixture of what is familiar and unfamiliar, pleasurable and discordant. You will be striving to figure out what is 'going on', what it is that makes enjoyable architecture, what it's about and what it means to the people who inhabit it and use it day in and day out. To some extent this will be an exercise in playing at 'architective': buildings don't readily profess their reasons for being. Instead, they stand mutely, challengingly, inviting you to put the clues together and work it out.

But successful designs self-evidently enjoy one simple and sometimes overlooked characteristic: the extent to which the architecture is celebratory – not, one quickly adds, as something coldly abstract, but as something inhabited, as a cultural event, as a joyful occasion when the designed housing and what is housed are in mutual harmony, the one facilitating and the other being lived.

Of course, some cultures find it difficult to celebrate themselves. Others have little to celebrate. However, it is almost certain that those buildings you enjoy the most will be those which communicate this curious keynote: what is invariably read as positive, optimistic and celebratory in the broad sense of a marriage between architectural design and some idiosyncratic cultural life tucked away within London's 'eccentric mess'. Other people might disagree. You, however, will no doubt feel refreshed and your 'spirit uplifted'. Meetings with buildings can do that. That's why Open House exists.

Archikids Club

Are you aged between 8-12?

Do you want to be an architect?

Then you need to join the Archikids club!

It's online, interactive and full of activities to help explore amazing architecture. Visit www.openhouse.org.uk for more info and sign up details or fill in the form below.

You can also join the club at the 'big build' at the Royal Festival Hall (p45)—build superstructures from bridges to towers to monuments with K'Nex, the world's most creative construction toy.

Big prizes will also be awarded for the best building model on the day!

Check out our website for other Big Build events

Grainger Trust and Hasbro K'Nex are supporting this year's event with goody bags for every Archikid and some cool mega-sized models of London landmarks.
