Introduction

What makes great places in which to live, work, play and learn? What makes a great city?

These are questions that concern Open House. Buildings shape and give form to our cities. Our capital is undergoing an extraordinary transformation, with once-in-a-lifetime developments such as the Olympic Park changing the face of London. But only with the city being replenished with exemplary places and spaces can it flourish now and in the future.

In 2007, Open House celebrates 15 years of opening eyes and minds to good design. During that time the organisation has raised awareness of the critical difference that well-designed and sustainable environments have on the quality of everyday life in London through its acclaimed year-round programmes, including this, the high-profile Open House London annual event.

Open House is a unique independent platform providing a vital opportunity for everyone to unpack what makes good places in which to live, work, play and learn. With a well-established basis of expertise and research and the support of amazing volunteers, we have led the way with pioneering campaigns and programmes in which thousands of people take an active part. Open House London is our annual call to Londoners of all kinds to join our debate.

Victoria Hunt

Hon FRIBA
Founding Director

Open House has been the first to create innovative approaches to understanding the city:

- Over 300,000 Londoners experiencing buildings at first hand
- Developing the first creative learning programmes for London's future generation
- Creating ground-breaking programmes that inspire decision-makers

Did you know?

Open House London was the very first event of its kind, celebrating the contemporary city, challenging preconceptions and raising awareness among Londoners.

“By working with young people on My City Too! we are encouraging young people to engage with their built environment and understand that they have a real role to play in determining its quality and character.”

Make Architects

Thousands of unique buildings have opened their doors to the public over 15 years.

Our creative learning programmes have reached over 20,000 young people across London.

Over 150 Planning Councillors are better equipped to assess the quality of design proposals thanks to the London Exemplar programme.

Research conducted by Open House indicates that 55% of young people felt rarely or never consulted about the types of spaces that they want.

Going global – Open House New York and Open House Dublin have emulated the success of Open House London.

Architecture in the flesh

A photograph of a modern building entrance. The architecture features large glass windows and prominent white structural columns that form a series of triangular frames. A group of people is gathered on the steps leading into the building, suggesting a public or open-house event. The overall scene is bright and modern.

Welcome to Open House London 2007. We hope you find something to grab your interest, there are 660 buildings, sites, talks, tours and events to choose from!

Spotlight

In addition to the main programme, here are several other events which will build your appetite for exploring architecture in different ways.

Competition to win Londoner's Diary 2008

Q: "On which new landmark building in East London might you find applied artwork by artist Bruce McLean?"

Thameside Media is offering free copies of the Londoner's Diary 2008 to the first 20 people who email the correct answer to competition@openhouse.org.uk. Furthermore, all Open House supporters can claim a special 15% discount and free p&p on any of Thameside Media's publications. Visit www.londonersworld.com for more details about the Londoner's Diary, and simply quote 'OPEN HOUSE' when ordering.

Architecture by Night

14 September

Open House and Maggie's are teaming up for the third year running to create a fundraising event with a difference...London Night Hike 2007. A 17 mile night-time sponsored hike following the circle line route...taking in dinner in the Guildhall, visits to The Wellcome Trust Gibbs Building, The Royal Geographical Society, Somerset House, City Hall, and last but not least, an exclusive night-time flight on the British Airways London Eye. All this...and back to the Guildhall in time for breakfast. See openhouse.org.uk for details.

City voices

"The Mayor has created Design for London to promote and instigate more creative, thoughtful and integrated design which can inspire a better quality of life for Londoners. We believe that Open House can help to achieve this, and so make London a more dynamic, diverse and engaged city."

Peter Bishop, Director, Design for London

"While London is undergoing a remarkable transformation, young people have little understanding of and even less involvement in the process of change. Open House's My City Too programme is a timely response to the challenge of helping the next generation of Londoners influence the future development of their city"

Rt Hon Nick Raynsford MP

"The instant popularity of the inaugural Open House Dublin completely overwhelmed us - it was great to see how the city's architecture captivated people's imagination - from landmark buildings, historic properties and architect-designed one-off houses. Good architecture has the power to transform people's lives and the Open House concept is a testament to the enduring appeal buildings hold."

Irish Architecture Foundation

"As the United States' largest architecture and design event, celebrating its fifth year, openhousenewyork transforms NYC into an interactive, innovative, and educational exhibition of the built-environment. The Open House idea successfully addresses the public's need to learn more about the architecture and design that affect their daily lives."

Tune in & turn up

Open House London is one of the most important cultural events covered on the Robert Elms show on BBC London 94.9. Every year we dedicate large slices of air time to this amazing architectural extravaganza because every year our listeners love it. London has a seemingly insatiable appetite for its architectural treasures, large and small, public and private ancient and modern, sacred and secular.

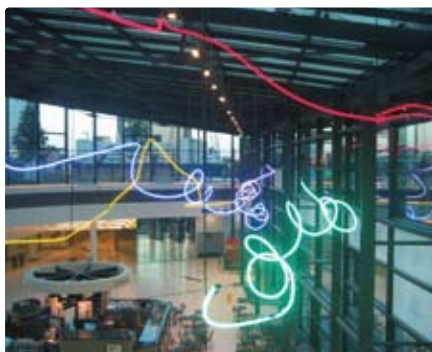

The annual outpouring of interest in the insides of buildings many of which are closed off to us all for the rest of the year is somewhere between curiosity and obsession with queues snaking round the great monuments and fanatics cramming in as many visits as possible. It is also a shared passion for the stories which buildings have to tell, a passion which is always apparent on our show but reaches a delightful crescendo in the week running up to Open House London when London's architecture comes alive like no other time.

Design matters

“Architecture is about more than just aesthetics. It’s about belonging. Open House London gets you to look at your city, then go out and change it.”
Tom Dyckhoff, Architecture and Design Critic, The Times

Open House London provides Londoners with the opportunity to identify with well-designed architecture in the public and private realm, and appreciate its social, economic and environmental significance. We believe the best way to do this is to experience exemplary design at first hand – ‘in the flesh’, to acquire knowledge, and join the debate about the design standards of the city, the current issues it faces and its future.

2007 sees several design-based issues shaping the city exemplified in the Open House London programme:

Eco-issues in the built environment – public awareness is higher than ever before and exemplars of all kinds of sustainability in the built environment are showcased, showing how everyone can do their bit to reduce carbon footprint. Look for the GREEN BUILD boxes for ecological highlights from eco-homes such as a house on Rowe Lane in Hackney, to office developments such as 19 Hanover Square in the heart of London, to the Sponge eco-trail in South London. Also look out for the mention of ‘sustainable features’ in many of the buildings in the main programme for everything in between. Open House will feature a talk by eco-home owners in the week preceding the event, held at the Allgood gallery W1. See openhouse.org.uk for details.

A focus on the role art in the public realm has to play in regeneration, placemaking, and enrichment of the built environment – events at BBC White City, Bart’s Hospital and Canary Wharf are highlighted in red in the main programme.

London’s future is key with major developments changing the face of certain areas profiled during the event. King’s Place in King’s Cross, (new home for the Guardian) will have site tours, and plans for the redevelopment of King’s Cross station can be viewed at John McAslan and Partners. Meanwhile walks and site tours in Peckham, Barking and Erith look at the changing fabric of those areas, and the Olympic Delivery Authority hosts amazing tours around the London 2012 Olympic Park, a major public viewing of the area and with project team professionals to meet face to face. Also see the new transport hub to serve the Stratford area. Building your interest and knowledge during the event and beyond is the new Open House ‘FUTURE LONDON’ microsite profiling major developments such as King’s Place and others, visit openhouse.org.uk for more information.

Open House will also be presenting a number of exemplary spaces for working and learning, see right.

Open House London showcases a selection of newly designed exemplars for the places in which we work and learn, with two publications.

New this year is a publication focusing on exemplary workspaces across London in a partnership with the British Council for Offices, and is also funded by Derwent London and Stanhope Plc. 'Learning by Design', funded by the Department for Children, Schools and Families is in its 3rd year and highlights primary and secondary schools, Classrooms of the Future, Early Years Centres and City Learning Centres.

The featured buildings will be opening up, providing an opportunity to hear at first hand the views of the users as well as the architects (see programme index p67). The publications will be available from early September through our website openhouse.org.uk.

RIBA Award Winning exemplars such as the newly revamped Young Vic and V&A Museum of Childhood amongst others can also be visited often with the architects present too.

"Learning by Design will encourage anyone involved in providing educational, childcare or family support facilities to demand buildings that are innovative, sustainable, practical, accessible and secure."

Jim Knight, Minister of State for Schools and 14-19 Learners

Related Events

openhousenewyork is 6-7 October.

Open House Dublin is 19-21 October.

Volunteers

Hundreds of professionals and enthusiasts volunteer their time over the weekend as architectural Guides and Stewards to enable you to enjoy the experience. In recognition of their role in making the event happen their badge enables them to gain priority access to buildings apart from those that are pre-booking only. For information about volunteering in 2008, please email admin@openhouse.org.uk.

Access Information

This year Open House is working in partnership with Artsline, the disability information service, to provide an online access information service for the event. Where buildings have supplied this information, the Artsline team can answer simple access queries thereby insuring that visitors can prepare for a successful and enjoyable visit.

Getting around Open House

Journey Planner – Web

To plan your Open House travel, visit Transport for London's (TfL) Journey Planner at tfl.gov.uk

Journey Planner incorporates live travel information to give you the quickest route. You can also select preferred modes of transport with options that include wheelchair accessibility and walking. Use Oyster for the cheapest way to travel to every Open House. Visit tfl.gov.uk.

Journey Planner – Mobile

During the event, TfL's TEXT Journey Planner service can help you plan the quickest routes while on the move. All you need to do is send a text with the buildings' postcodes to 60835 which is charged at your network operator's standard rate. For example, text: SW1A 2AH to SE12AA

You'll then get a FREE text back with the journey details. Find the full postcodes listed in this guide and at openhouse.org.uk

Camden Walking Guide

We are joining forces with DIY Planet Repairs, the Mayor of London's campaign, which aims to cut London's carbon emissions and make London a cleaner, greener, more sustainable city. This walking guide for the Camden area will help visitors explore London on foot, taking in walkable routes between buildings, and packed with green and healthy tips! Collect your mapguide from local libraries and participating buildings.

Visit openhouse.org.uk or tfl.gov.uk/roadusers/sustainable-travel for more information.

Up close and personal

Experiencing architecture is about sampling the real thing, in the flesh.

Explore buildings, ask questions, form opinions, and learn one thing you didn't know before!

Meet the architects that help shape Londoners' environments. Look out for the code 'A' on entries showing where you can meet architects in the flesh! They will be giving their professional expertise, leading tours or giving talks, sometimes project team members for that building; for instance check out tours of Brunswick Centre by Levitt Bernstein, AOC at the Janet Summers Early Years Centre, tours by Peter St John at V&A Museum of Childhood, AHMM at Westminster Academy. Also visit the architects at their studios and hear about current projects from the professionals. You never know, they might learn something from you too!

Thousands of professionals and enthusiasts volunteer their time and knowledge as architectural Guides and Stewards. Look out for them at Open House sites. Archifacts sheets are available most places and tell you what you need to know about that building.

Look up, look down, look out...ultimately the most you can discover about the buildings you live work and play in is by experiencing it in the flesh. Consider its best and worst features, its impact on you and its surroundings, is it a good neighbour and if not why, would you want to live or work in it, is it beautiful, plain or interesting, does it serve its purpose...this is just a start but you get the idea!

Meetings with buildings

Refreshing the parts other creative disciplines can't reach

No doubt, like most Londoners, you know the city as a select patterning of places and spaces, of friends and associates linked together into a patterning that forms your personal London. The rest is a comparative mystery. It is this pattern which the year-round programmes of Open House invite you to fracture, to enter new territories and explore what the city offers.

In whatever way you 'meet' with buildings – whether you join a Saturday morning architecture tour or take advantage of the Open House London event - you will, no doubt, find yourself addressing a mixture of what is familiar and unfamiliar, pleasurable and discordant. You'll be trying to figure out what is 'going on', what it is that makes an architecture, what it's about and what it means to the people who inhabit it and use it day in and day out.

Ken Allinson RIBA, author of London's Contemporary Architecture: A visitor's guide (See p72).

Open House helps you to unpack architecture year-round!

LOCATION LONDON

London's vast range of architecture is a major draw for film-makers. Over 90 Open House properties have also starred as film locations on the big and small screen including those listed below.

Film London promotes the capital as a destination for film-making and last year helped over 1000 projects get the best from the city, with directors such as Mike Leigh, Woody Allen, David Cronenberg and Ken Loach, all shooting here.
