

An OPEN HOUSE Programme

OpenHouse London Architecture Up Close 20–21 September 2008

Opening eyes, minds and doors to good design

The capital's greatest architectural showcase – your chance to explore hundreds of inspiring buildings for free

openhouse.org.uk

Welcome

Change is happening on a massive scale on London's architectural front: bold new structures going up; old ones renovated, re-invented and preserved. London's community of world class architects play a key role in creating this amazing city. What you feel about it all matters.

A greater appreciation of the physical fabric of London is one of the founding purposes of Open House London and we hope that for many people it will mark a new, evaluative way of looking at London.

Remember, even more than most great cities, London is not only a patchwork of still-distinct districts, but within each of those districts, challenging new projects and the hand-me-downs of history jog and jostle, side by side. Just like Londoners, in fact. London is a talkative place; let's talk more about architecture – the buildings we've got and the buildings we want. Make the most of Open House London – start a discussion and have your say about your city!

Victoria Thornton

Victoria Thornton Hon FRIBA
Founding Director

"I'm delighted to support Open House London 2008. London's architecture really does tell the story of this magnificent city, from Roman remains to 21st-century confections of glass and steel. Open House allows you to get up close and personal with some of the city's most iconic buildings as well as its hidden gems."

Boris Johnson
Mayor of London

Open House is a unique independent organisation providing a vital opportunity for everyone to unpack what makes good places for living, working, playing and learning

But before you delve in and explore all the great buildings, check out these fascinating facts about Open House year-round...

Did you know?

Our vision is to open eyes, minds and doors to the power of good design. Here are some of the ways in which we help Londoners year-round to develop a better understanding of how architecture influences our daily lives...

- Our Green Sky Thinking debate highlighted young architects' creative thinking about what 'sustainability' means in practice
- Our programme of school building explorations helps hundreds of teachers, architects and local authority professionals to discover what makes a great place to learn

- Our research programme looks in-depth at how innovative housing design such as East London's Donnybrook Quarter can actively contribute to improving the quality of life in the city
- Over 200 Planning Councillors are better equipped to assess the quality of design proposals thanks to the London Exemplar programme
- Through the Architecture Education Network, we have been able to connect architects and teachers to show how architecture can be an incredible education resource

- Over the last year 2000 students aged 7-18 yrs have explored the capital's buildings and taken part in creative workshops on the Junior Open House and Open Up programmes
- Art in the Open is our new advocacy agency for the role of art in the public realm, working to influence London's key developments, spaces and places
- We commissioned a YouGov poll of the public in 2007, finding that 45% of Londoners felt strongly that they don't have a say in the design of new public spaces and buildings in their local area

Young people are worth investing in, can you help?

My City Too!

My City Too is a ground-breaking programme for young Londoners that enables dialogue between young people aged 12-17, designers, developers, councils and other potential role models. Created by Open House, it provides a platform for young people to express their aspirations for the future of London's built environment, and create their own manifesto.

"A lot of adults don't trust young people. They are suspicious of us and they feel threatened by groups of us hanging out together. I want to be free of those prejudices, and this project is one way to start changing people's opinion."

Glen (15 yrs)

"Instead of seeing bricks and mortar I now look at how a building affects society and people's lives,"

Mary (15 yrs)

Young Londoners' solutions for a better London

We need sheltered places to sit and to meet people that are better designed and well looked after

Our solution: Quality design and materials that are well looked after tell our communities that we are worth investing in

Let us have our say and young people will be fully involved in planning, designing and decision-making in their city

Our solution: We can't vote – yet – but it is our city too! We can help improve places and spaces and we'll use and respect them more if we've been asked

We want every generation to have their own corner in public spaces, acknowledging their needs and making them feel welcome

Our solution: Separating activity zones for small children, teenagers, adults and senior citizens through soft zoning (floor markings, tree fences, etc) will ensure everyone feels happy about sharing the same public space

Can you help?

By giving a donation to My City Too, you will:

- Enable more young people to learn about how to care for their city and neighbourhoods
- Help young people to be actively involved in shaping the city

As a My City Too supporter, you will:

- Be informed regularly of the impact My City Too is having on London spaces
- Be invited to My City Too events
- Be given the opportunity to meet/volunteer with My City Too young people

Case study

Stratford, E15: A My City Too project in Stratford enabled local young people to create an interactive game around how design can reduce anti-social behaviour. Some of the participants' ideas were then adopted by the local neighbourhood management team and a local playground was redesigned and refurbished accordingly. The playground is now safer and more practical for the whole community.

Nearly half of the UK's energy consumption comes from the ways in which our millions of buildings are lit, heated and used. Creating sustainable design solutions are among the most urgent issues for architects and designers in the capital. We need to address now how we can build in a greener way whilst integrating good quality design.

There is now much wider interest in carbon saving technologies, materials and designs in the urge to 'go green'. But how do we find out what has worked? Open House helps to answer this question by showcasing some of the most innovative green buildings, both new and renovated. These include schools, offices and community buildings as well as new build and retro-fitted eco-homes such as 73 Chester Road (see p18), plus the Sponge eco-tour (see p58). Look out for the green dot against building listings for Eco Exemplars or the G for Green Features.

Open House London also works in partnership with a number of organisations to help embed green design and thinking into our everyday lives:

Sustainable Southwark—showing how the borough's sustainable buildings are leading the way in making a greener, cleaner, well-designed city. For details on how to obtain a copy of this pamphlet, sponsored by LB Southwark, see our website.

Display energy certificates—a new initiative to inform people about the energy efficiency of public buildings. By October the certificates—which give an A to G energy efficiency rating—will be on view in large public buildings. Look out for DEC's in the public buildings opening their doors this year.

Green Building Guide—looking at how to plan, design and live sustainably in the 21st Century by exploring all the different aspects of what makes a building 'green'.

Love London (lovelondon.org.uk)—the capital's greenest annual festival, providing Londoners with the opportunity to explore what makes a cleaner, greener and healthier London.

Lastly, we want you to tell us what you think about green design through our Green Design poll! Please help us by logging on to openhouse.org.uk/poll

For more information on all of these programmes visit openhouse.org.uk/sustainability

Green Sky Studios

24–26 September 2008

You can find out more about green design in London through the 'Green Sky Studios' event which will be taking place for the first time ever in the week following Open House London. This exciting programme—the first of its kind—focuses directly on the pressing need to design and build green. This forms part of our new two-year sustainability programme—Green Sky Thinking.

London's emerging architects will be hosting informal events in their own studios, explaining their fresh thinking about sustainable design—even if their proposals are still on the drawing board. This is a great opportunity to explore and debate ideas about how we can make our cities greener.

Visit openhouse.org.uk/sustainability for more info.

How green is my city?

Showcasing green design exemplars in the capital

Open House London enables everyone to see and understand what makes excellent architecture and design. We think that the best way to do this is to experience architecture up close, and join the debate about the current design issues facing the capital. Here are some of the issues on our agenda this year...

Future London

The changing face of London will be showcased on the Open House Future London microsite at openhouse.org.uk/futurelondon. From masterplans to construction sites this web resource will illustrate facets of the capital's future potential. It will highlight regeneration projects including several schemes which are also profiled in Open House London such as the Olympic Park (p48), Alsop's Third City Vision for Croydon (p26), and the Greenwich Peninsula regeneration (p29).

Placemaking and art in the public realm

Artists are often involved in making London's changing cityscape a better one. This year Open House London is highlighting interesting temporary and permanent artists' contributions to public spaces and buildings, plus the following special talk. Look for the red dots in the listings!

Architect/Artist Talk at Coin Street neighbourhood centre

Sunday 21st September, 1pm

108 Stamford Street SE1 9NH

An exemplary architect/artist collaboration, the Coin Street neighbourhood centre won a RIBA award this year. Haworth Tompkins Architects worked closely with the artist Antoni Malinowski on developing the colour and treatments for the main façade and internal spaces. Steve Tompkins and Antoni Malinowski will discuss their collaboration at this special event.

Tickets are free but pre-booking is required, go to openhouse.org.uk/spotlight

Housing

It's estimated that the population of London will increase to over 8 million by 2016. The need for well-designed housing is great. Look for the yellow dots throughout the listings for past and present housing. Also see the website for details of special housing cycling tours. The following talk also starts to look at some of these issues.

Donnybrook Quarter Talk at Whitechapel Gallery

Tuesday 16th September, 6.30pm-8.30pm

Drinks from 6.30pm, talk at 7.15pm

80-82 Whitechapel High Street, London, E1 7QX

Peter Barber Architect's competition winning design Donnybrook Quarter, East London (see p57) was completed in 2006 to international critical acclaim, described as a model for high-density, low-rise urban design. Peter Barber will discuss the genesis of his practice's radical housing schemes and how architecture can help shape cities that are economically and socially sustainable.

Tickets are free but pre-booking is required, go to openhouse.org.uk/spotlight.

Exemplars: Also, look out for the blue and purple dots which represent school and office exemplars. Civic Trust and RIBA Award Winners are also identified in the building descriptions.

Design matters?

Robert Elms, self-confessed building enthusiast, writes...

During Open House London week we open our phone lines on the Robert Elms show on BBC London 94.9 and the public respond with a torrent of calls and questions, opinions and arguments about London's built environment.

This annual architectural carnival is one of the great events of the year and one of the biggest success stories of the years that I've been presenting my show. It's a hotly awaited date in the calendar when the city turns inside out and all those monuments and offices, faceless government buildings and grand corporate headquarters, tiny crypts and forgotten corners of our city from which we are usually excluded are suddenly available to all.

The greatest aspect of Open House London for me is the way that it has now spread to every corner of our sprawling metropolis, so that the far off boroughs and outlying quarters also get a chance to show off their treasures alongside the famous central London landmarks where the queues snake round the block. Also the thousands of volunteers who act as guides, sharing their enthusiasm and knowledge with the tens of thousands of ordinary Londoners who take the opportunities offered by this extraordinary event, to really see behind the façades of our city.

Robert Elms Show
12noon – 3pm
BBC London 94.9fm

"Architecture is an astonishing three-dimensional, living, history book, and for the past ten years Open House London has been opening this book for Londoners, giving them the opportunity to explore and see their city in an exciting new way. From people opening their homes to government creaking open the doors of hallowed institutions, it is a generous, truly democratic event that has become a must in the calendar of cultured London."

Charlie Luxton

Architect and Broadcaster
Charlie's pick of the bunch includes Portcullis House, Blizard Building and Crossness Engine House.

"The quality of the design of buildings and public spaces affects our lives. Open House helps us to better understand and experience these buildings and spaces."

Richard Rogers

Architect

"The only way to experience the full depth, meaning and feeling of architecture is to move around inside it, touch it, viscerally engage with it. Open House allows people to do just that and, in its education and its opening up of buildings to the city, it has been doing an exemplary and pioneering service to London."

Edwin Heathcote

Architecture Critic of the Financial Times and Open House Trustee

"The streets of London may not be paved with gold, but they are host to a wealth of buildings that we are inclined to pass by without even seeing them. We forget also that architecture is not just about structures and façades, but about spaces for people to inhabit, explore and enjoy. Open your eyes, and thank Open House for opening all of these doors again. Although never the most popular of buildings, Richard Seifert's Centre Point is to these eyes a wonderfully elegant structure, and a lasting monument to the bold modernity envisaged by swinging London."

Malcolm Garrett RDI

Graphic Designer

My London

Commentators, experts and enthusiasts give their opinions and personal favourites

"Open House London is a fantastic occasion for legitimate access to our city's buildings—from homes to hospitals, bomb proof bunkers to art deco cinemas, you've got 48 hours to satisfy your architectural inquisitiveness. My must-visit top three are the Horse Hospital Camden, The Vintners Hall (14th Century spiritual home of the wine trade!) in the City, and The Gala Bingo Club in Greenwich."

Jenny Eclair

Writer/Performer

"As a London dweller for the past 25 years, I have photographed many of the changes of this great city. I have been granted access to unusual places, many of which are not publicly accessible. For those places I cannot get into, I have relied on Open House London to satisfy my curiosity. It provides you with the means to learn more about your built environment. You could pursue the buildings that you're least familiar with. I would recommend viewing the wonderful Brunswick Centre this year. The ziggurat profile has modernist associations and it's easy to imagine the optimism that informed this design."

Grant Smith

Photographer

"It's very hard to see London. We see it every day. But we don't really SEE it. We rush round in a daze, head in the paper, clamped to a mobile, without once stopping to gawp at, well, London. There are few spots to break free from London's claustrophobia, its sprawling mess. Its infrastructure is labyrinthine; we have few grand vistas, few hills and our skyscrapers are mostly locked to all but bankers. The Thames is one of the few spaces you can ever take a breath and really see the place in which you live. London's beauty always needs unlocking; Open House gets you to look at your city, then go out and change it."

Tom Dyckhoff

Architecture and Design critic for The Times

Information & getting around

Here's a map to help you find your way around London, and as a reference to the following pages (see contents, right).

Admission is FREE for all Open House London events on 20–21 September 2008.

This section tells you all you need to know about the event, the information you will need and how to get it, and what to expect on the day.

How do I find out more?
Visit the Open House website
openhouse.org.uk

The website is your other resource for your activity planning. It builds on the information you see in this programme. There are interactive searches for period of architecture, type of building, name of architect or geographical location. You can see where buildings are located and plan your route between them, using the handy map-based interface. All pre-bookings taken through Open House operate on here. There are images and archi-factsheets for most entries.

The website also gives you further information on many of our other programmes, and allows you to order further copies of this programme and other related publications.

What will I find when I get to the buildings?

At many of the 690 sites, there will be someone to show you around and answer your questions. These are the Open House guides and stewards, and there are thousands of them—some professional, some amateur enthusiast, all volunteering their time and knowledge. In recognition of their role their badge enables them to gain priority access to buildings apart from those that are pre-booking only.

For information about volunteering in 2009, please email admin@openhouse.org.uk.

You can also meet some of the architects shaping our changing environment. Look out for the entries marked with a code A throughout this guide and in the index; it means that architects will be giving talks and tours of some of the buildings they've designed. Also, some of their studios/offices will be open, so that you can see the projects they're working on. They will be sharing their expertise, but it's not all one way—they'll be keen to dialogue with you too! Sometimes you can also meet the property owner who will also appreciate your positive feedback!

Don't forget to look out for the archi-factsheets too which will be available at most buildings.

Support Open House

Open House is London's leading architecture education charity. We bring people together to engage in debate and dialogue – communities with designers; citizens with city planners; children with architects – to work towards a better London of which we can all be proud. Open House London is just one of our many initiatives.

We need to raise every penny to cover the costs of our activities. Open House does not receive regular public funding. We rely on the generous support of our sponsors and donors.

Please help us to open eyes, minds and doors to the power of architecture and design and the impact it can have on our daily lives.

There are many ways in which you or your organisation could support our work.

For more information please contact Julie Leonard on 020 7383 0782, jleonard@openhouse.org.uk.

Or make a donation now by filling in the form to the right and sending to the Freepost address.

Thank you.
