Open House is a unique, independent organisation committed to raising the standard for London's architecture and built environment by opening people's eyes and minds to good design.

What is the real value of excellence in architecture?

Victoria Thornton Hon FRIBA

Founding Director, Open House

The way we plan, design and build our cities can transform our lives for the better in many ways: good architecture can capture our imagination, change the way we relate to our neighbours and fellow Londoners, create new employment and revitalise neglected areas, and improve our health and well-being. The impact of good design is a more attractive environment, stronger communities with a sense of ownership and pride in their local area, and new financial investment. Well-designed buildings and public spaces are, therefore, vital in creating and sustaining a vibrant city, from Westminster to Waltham Forest and from Camden to Croydon. Contemporary architecture that is aspirational, innovative and visionary can help to create a society with the same characteristics.

However, architecture is not a subject taught in the formal education system. From school to later life, we often have no formal way of learning how to express our ideas, needs and aspirations for the quality of the buildings and public spaces in which we live, work, play and learn. Open House believes everyone should have the opportunity to articulate their views and concerns by having the right tools and language.

Open House is a respected and trusted organisation that responds to the demands of its ever-growing audience of decision-makers, young people and the wider community. The organisation plays a unique role in the capital through campaigning for the independent voice, through its London-wide remit, and through the number and diversity of people it reaches. Its coherent approach to people and place focuses on action research, experiential learning, exploring inspirational exemplars and sharing good practice. Through this, Open House encourages everyone in London to invest in good contemporary design by seeing its value.

Open House continues to make a real and practical impact by connecting professionals, practitioners, decision-makers and Londoners across all 33 boroughs, encouraging their mutual understanding to make the capital a better place. We look forward to continuing to develop our research and initiatives to focus strategically London-wide and on places of change in the capital.

How is London changing?

The Rt Hon Nick Raynsford MP

Open House Trustee and
Chair of Supporters at Large

Cities have continuously evolved through time, but their success has always been dependent on them providing a safe and attractive environment in which people can live, work and relax. In the increasingly competitive global context of the 21st century, the prosperity of each city will depend on its ability to satisfy these requirements.

London starts with many advantages, boasting 2000 years of history, a reputation as a home of world-class contemporary design, and an almost unparalleled economic and cultural infrastructure. As well as all these qualities, London's unique character reflects its astonishingly varied texture of diverse neighbourhoods linked together by a complex web of streets, rivers and transport networks. This rich urban geography is not static, but is changing all the time as the transformation of Canary Wharf, the Greenwich Peninsula and now the Olympic Park demonstrates so clearly.

The quality of our urban design is therefore vital to our city's future, and now more than ever we need to understand, value and advocate for the highest design standards in our built environment. Open House has performed an exceptional service over the past 17 years in raising the profile of London's buildings and public spaces, and raising awareness of their value. In Open House's 18th year I am happy to commend its vitally important work and to urge all those with responsibility for London's built environment to heed its message.

How do we relate to our city?

Edwin Heathcote

Architectural Critic

Financial Times,

Open House Trustee

The city, the most complex and extraordinary result of civilisation, exists at different levels: as an idea – the skyline, the monuments, the museums; as a network – the intricate weave of streets and squares, of transport and communications; and as a backdrop – the frame against which we play out the dramas and rituals of our everyday lives. Each incarnation demands a distinct approach yet one that communicates and negotiates with each of the others.

Recent architectural debate has been dominated by the ‘icon’ but no city can be made of icons. In fact icons are anathema to the everyday: the city is made of the ordinary. That sounds dull but it isn’t, because London’s deep layers of history and memory, combined with and overlaid by the contemporary, create a subtly shifting palimpsest of endless invention and adaptation. Pieces of the city are reused and reinvented, they fall in and out of favour and fashion, and each era leaves its traces on a compelling background.

Each section of the city has embedded within it a story and is itself a part of the larger urban narrative. Those who have stewardship of the city must become conscious of that story and work with the fabric, not against it, to elaborate the story and make it clearer while adding a layer that brings new life. Every intervention has the potential to be a complex, endlessly fascinating template for a new chapter, but equally could become a dead end, an appendix.

London, possibly more than any other city, has proved able to reinvent itself whilst building on its own mythology and an awareness of the beauty in the subtlest patterns of its fabric rather than in the quest for the theatrical and the formal. Its narrative will develop best when those who are responsible for shaping it dig down into the layers of change, to discern what it is about the areas and buildings that have been and are able to accommodate industry and commerce but also luxury and consumption, that have made the city what it is.

It is less about the iconic than about the fabric, the pavements on which we walk, the blend of old and new, of how the city speaks to us through the parks, streets and alleys, of how the ground and the buildings rising from it become the set against which we can live our lives as best we can, and as we can only in London.

Outside In: London's public spaces

Focusing on buildings is only one part of Open House's work. Just as much as buildings, our streets, squares and parks define the experience of the city and of the neighbourhoods where we live. Thinking more holistically about these places with all involved – from those initiating the projects, such as developers or public sector clients, to those creating and designing them – is part of Open House's remit.

Cultural meaning and identity affects the experience of public spaces as much as design. Current projects such as the Mayor's Great Spaces and the Olympic Park and its legacy underline this emphasis. Open House's research programmes and professional forums examine our spaces from the outside in, looking at how they affect our behaviour and the city's cultural identity, to influence policy and raise debate for new developments and places of change.

Working with young people across London, our My City Too! programme has evidenced what they want from the places they inhabit: from their function, design and quality to the role of public art. Bringing together artists, architects, developers, policy-makers and others, our Art in the Open initiative advocates a more inspirational environment for London. As London's independent advisor on art in the public realm, it focuses on themes of common interest such as light, commemoration and celebration, and urban change.

Together our initiatives reflect our belief that public space only benefits from more inclusive creative thinking across professional disciplines, generations and perspectives. At a time of financial uncertainty Open House's aim is to show the continued value of our public spaces and the importance of creativity in these diverse dialogues to affect London's everyday experience.

Corina, 15, My City Too! Young Ambassador
“It's true that changes in London's spaces need to be for the good of everyone, so everyone's views need to be taken into account, including young people. One day we will be the ones living and working in the city!”

Elliot Lipton, Managing Director, First Base Ltd, Chair of Art in the Open Advisory Board
“Good public space has the ability to transform new developments by influencing how we relate to our homes, surrounding communities and the city. It is just as important as the design of the buildings themselves and we need to ensure that we support its quality and experience. Art in the Open, as part of Open House, plays a fundamental role for London in the development of exceptional public spaces by encouraging greater collaboration between the built environment and the visual arts sectors including clients, commissioners, artists and architects.”

Learning about architecture

Against the backdrop of one of the largest-ever programmes of school building and refurbishment, we must create opportunities for young people in particular to learn how they can influence the quality of the capital's contemporary architecture for the better.

Learning about architecture can open up new ways of expressing ideas, reinvigorate perceptions of the world around us, and deepen an understanding of the individual's role and responsibility in wider society. To break down the social and cultural barriers that prevent people from becoming involved in the shaping of their environment, we must enable them to engage effectively with design ideas. Open House believes this is possible through a unique model of experience, exploration and – most importantly – creative interactive learning.

Open House year-round programmes of seminars, workshops and masterclasses for architects, teachers, governors, local authority officers and councillors and others involved in educational transformation develop participants' ability to evaluate and argue for design quality. Our network across the property, planning and policy-making worlds also enables them to share new ideas and exchange knowledge with their peers.

Open House's formal learning programmes such as Junior Open House and Open Up enable thousands of students across the capital to interact with spaces and professionals that they might never have previously encountered, involves and respects their views as potential clients, and in so doing enables them to develop a sense of value and ownership of their environment. Our model of stakeholder engagement generates new thinking that can add great value to the process of planning and designing a new school build or refurbishment.

Our new initiative, the Open House Education Fund, has been developed to enable those who are – or who seek to be – involved in educational transformation to draw on this expertise in engagement and action research. It offers opportunities for staff at all levels to build their skills: from learning how to best engage with school clients (from pupils to headteachers and governors) to developing contacts with contractors, local authorities and other decision-makers. Ultimately the Fund will create a catalyst for new thinking and research that will continue to push the boundaries of innovation in architecture education.

Vernon Coaker MP, Minister of State for Schools and Learners

"The DCSF supports the work that Open House is doing in raising awareness of the importance of good design through its events and through the publication of the 'Learning by Design' resources showcasing recently completed schools and early years facilities. We welcome its engagement with schools through the Junior Open House week, and wish the organisation every success in the future."

How Open House works

Open House is London's leading independent architecture education organisation and charity. Our vision is to open eyes, minds and doors to the power of architecture to transform our lives. Our year-round initiatives inspire and inform decision-makers, young people and the wider community by...

Challenging:

We challenge Londoners to re-assess their ideas about architecture through Open House London every September: for one weekend in the year, 200,000 Londoners come together to explore great architecture at first hand in all corners of the capital

Inspiring:

We inspire young people to see how architecture affects their daily lives: the My City Too programme has enabled over 1000 young Londoners to share their aspirations and solutions for the future city through community projects, surveys and a manifesto

Innovating:

We unlock the potential of architecture as a learning tool: the Junior Open House and Open Up programmes for primary and secondary schools have inspired thousands of students through explorations of buildings and participation in creative workshops

Campaigning:

We campaign to promote sustainability as an integral part of design excellence. Our integrated programme of debates, explorations, exhibitions and displays, talks, tours and resources focuses on the question 'Is good design, green design?'

Investigating:

We undertake extensive research among Londoners: a recent poll, for example, found that 45% of them felt strongly that they don't have a say in the design of new public spaces and buildings in their local area

Championing:

We develop people's skills to champion the value of good design: more than 200 planning councillors are better equipped to assess the quality of design proposals thanks to the Open House Exemplar programme, now in its 4th year

Collaborating:

We create a platform for dialogue between the property sector, local authorities, teachers and architects who are brought together every year to discover what makes great places through seminars, training sessions and programmes

Influencing:

We help design professionals create successful places and spaces: our advocacy initiative Art in the Open, looking at the role of art in the public realm, seeks to influence key developments through research and guidance such as the resource artintheopen.org.uk

My London

Victoria Thornton Hon FRIBA, Founding Director, Open House

Welcome to Open House London 2009: the capital's biggest architecture festival is again throwing open the doors of hundreds of buildings giving you the chance to explore the best of the city's architecture. Great buildings and the city's public spaces shape our daily lives as we live, learn, work and play. Get out on 19 & 20 September and get inside what makes London great. Here, some Londoners share their thoughts on London and recommendations for the event...

Robert Noel, Chairman, Westminster Property Association and Supporter of Open House

"Open House gives us the excuse to feast on our architectural heritage and learn about an individual building's place in our national history and life today. Walk from Apsley House through St James's Park to Westminster Hall then move onto the Royal Courts of Justice."

Tony Chambers, wallpaper* editor-in-chief

"Classics like the Royal College of Physicians, Highpoint and Trellick Tower are an obvious must-see during Open House London, but there is a wealth of contemporary architecture too, like the Siobhan Davies Studios by Sarah Wigglesworth Architects, 85 Swains Lane by Eldridge Smerin or the Sunken House by Adjaye Associates."

Richard Rogers, Lord Rogers of Riverside CH

"Open House is a wonderful concept trying to help break down the barrier between the architectural profession and the public by explaining what architects do and how buildings are designed and built. It is very hard to recommend one building in a city where there are so many good architects and buildings."

John Alker, Head of Advocacy, UK Green Building Council

"Where do you start with the architecture on offer in London? There is such quality and diversity, both new and old. It's also heartening to see the growth of sustainability—green building—not as some optional extra, but as integral to the overall concept of good design. It's almost unfair to single buildings out, but I'm looking forward to taking in the new LSE building—a major renovation, which has created a fantastic new space while retaining original features. I'll also take in one or two of the exemplar green homes, which offer such a positive vision of the future—low impact, but high quality of life."

Boris Johnson, Mayor of London

"I'm delighted to support Open House London 2009. London's architecture really does tell the story of this magnificent city. Experiencing a building in the flesh can help to understand, appreciate and critique it. Open House London hopes to inspire everyone to explore the Capital and take an interest in good design for generations today and into the future."

Peter Bishop, Director, Design Development & Environment, London Development Agency

"London's unique architecture—from the domestic to cultural and civic landmarks—forms a vital part of London's identity and history. Open House provides the opportunity to explore some of our greatest buildings and to stumble across the unusual, the new and the quirky; such as 85 Swains Lane, a new house set in Highgate Cemetery by Eldridge Smerin."

Sean Griffiths, Practice Director, FAT

"London is a mess interspersed with monuments that are never positioned monumentally which is what is good about it. It's not a city of objects, but one which unfolds as you move through it. Notwithstanding that its monuments are marvellous and eccentric from Hawksmoor's churches to Trellick Tower. Most of the churches are open all year round, so for Open House I'd recommend Trellick which isn't."

Andrew Whiting, Practice Director, HÛT

"It's the dynamism of London that I love—the way that architecture, sometimes subtle, sometimes conspicuous, can transform existing spaces, buildings and areas. Go and have a look at the adjacent Village Underground and Rivington Place projects as an example."

Paul Finch OBE, Editor emeritus of the Architectural Review and Director,
World Architecture Festival

"London is full of architectural marvels both old and new. I would strongly recommend a visit to Hopkins & Partners' Portcullis House, the MPs' building opposite Big Ben. It has real gravitas and a marvellous central space. Best of all, you can use the Westminster Underground Station below, designed by the same architect as part of the Jubilee Line programme. The station is magnificent - no interior space in London comes near it. A wonderful example of architecture applied to engineering."

Ken Allinson, Architect and Author

"Open House has to be the finest, largest and most lively and stimulating architectural event in London's cultural calendar. Here is culture and Culture in a unique intermix of the everyday and the self-consciously aspirational, all of it cut through by a shared concern for quality in such a manner that it is difficult to say if Open House is about architecture or simply London life. It's there for you to construct your own agenda, with sufficient content to enable you to determine your own content. And, while some of the event's content remains among recurring favourites, some 30-40% changes each year, especially among the group of smaller and private properties. Make the most of it in 2009!"

Margaret Howell, Fashion Designer

"Grand, famous, small, obscure, London's buildings open for us this weekend; a privilege not to be missed. What I find really exciting though is insight into sometimes extraordinary personal spaces, such as Richard Wilson's studio on the river Thames, Slice of Reality. One's spirit is totally lifted by the experience."

Agnieszka Glowacka, Practice Director, Glowacka Rennie

"Variety is the spice of life, and the diversity of architecture and spatial experiences on offer in London makes it a great city. In this spirit of variety I recommend two very different and distinctive Open House experiences: Churchill's underground bunker in Neasden (37 bomb-proof rooms steeped in history, buried 40 feet below ground) and Centre Point (32 glazed floors of beautiful capital views, soaring 385 feet above Tottenham Court Road station)."

Jim McClelland, Founder & Editor,
*sustain' magazine

"Sustainability in the built environment calls not for single-issue politics, but for a spirit of pluralism in design. It is not about 'either/or', it is about 'and'. Take the example of Rye Oak Children's Centre in Southwark, by Eger Architects: zero-carbon-rated construction, with up to 20% energy from renewables AND water recycling AND natural ventilation AND a living 'brown' roof for biodiversity. All elements combine to deliver significant local-community benefit, integrated into the urban fabric alongside existing Victorian architecture. Joined-up. Smart. Sustainable."

Charlie Luxton, Architect and Broadcaster

"London may not have the Grand Beauty of Paris or the visual power of New York. Its magic lies in the fact it's a city of such density of stories and richness of history, like an attic full of treasures waiting to be discovered by the curious explorer..."

Robert Elms Show 12noon – 3pm
BBC London 94.9FM

"When Open House throws open the portals of so many otherwise inaccessible London buildings, it also opens our eyes to the surprising variety of architectural wonders in our midst and our minds to infinite possibilities of the built environment."

For years now we have covered this staggeringly successful cultural event with relish on my daily show on BBC London 94.9. Every year we receive an avalanche of calls and e-mails from people eager to know more about the opportunities afforded by this unique extravaganza of the edifice. They are hungry to see behind the façades, to learn the tales and the techniques that all buildings have to tell. Which is why queues form round the iconic sites and tens of thousands attend the big ticket tours.

But it isn't just City Hall, Foreign Office & India Office or Lloyd's of London which attract attention. It's countless, usually unnoticed buildings out in the suburban boroughs or tucked down unsung side-streets. The true architectural stamp of London is its variety, the clash and the juxtaposition, the old and new, grand and humble jostling for attention and all are available to us during Open House London.

So yet again from Barking to Bromley, Havering to Hillingdon, volunteers will prepare to open their doors to the inquisitive crowds, aficionados will plan their weekends for maximum exposure and Londoners in general will learn a little more about the city we share. BBC London 94.9 will of course be with them."

Explore and debate design issues at openhouse.org.uk/designmatters

Open House London enables everyone to explore and debate what makes excellent architecture and design. We think that the best way to do this is to experience architecture up close, and to join the debate about the current design issues facing the capital. Here are some of the issues on our agenda this year...

Art and Places

Across London various initiatives are underway that connect people, place and art as part of the longer-term redevelopment of areas, helping to humanise their current and future experiences. This year Open House London is highlighting some of these approaches, showing how new forms of more local engagement are inspiring the capital's places. Look out for the red dots in the main section.

In Hackney, at 20, Dalston Lane (p34) find out more about changes to the area reflecting its creative identity. At Greenwich Peninsula (p32) there are tours of the area including the public realm and artists' commissions. In South East London find out more about the planned Peckham Space, (p56 and pictured right) and how it's responding to its surroundings.

If you have a favourite artwork outside in London's public spaces, then take part in our survey (p72) and help Open House's year-round work influencing London's public art.

Also take a look at the greatest regeneration project currently taking place, with tours of the London 2012 Olympic Park (p50).

How we live

It's estimated that the population of London will increase to over 8 million by 2016. The need for well-designed housing is great. Look for the yellow dots throughout the listings for past and present housing exemplars to compare and contrast how we are living now. Projects include Adelaide Wharf (p33 and pictured above right), and Laycock Street (p43). Also head out to Stratford to the new East Thames building (p50) for the exhibition 'Homework: Design in Social Housing 1979-2009', exploring the history of social housing and how vibrant communities are created and greener objectives met. It includes a section on the Open House My City Too! youth engagement programme and the Inside Out initiative for East Potential exploring through an interactive game the relationship between young people and the built environment, and their right to 'be safe, enjoy and achieve'.

Exemplars

Also, look out for the blue and purple dots which represent school and office exemplars. Civic Trust and RIBA Award Winners such as the King's Cross Construction Skills Centre (pictured below) are also identified in the building descriptions.

Have your say

Tell us what you think about London and its architecture on p72, or go to our website openhouse.org.uk to join the debate!

Coming in September...

Join the 'Opening up London' great debate. See openhouse.org.uk/designmatters

Coolly, madly, greenly

See openhouse.org.uk/green for more info on all things green in the event this year

This year, Open House London helps to look at innovation in green design by showcasing new and renovated eco buildings. Nearly half of the UK's energy consumption comes from the ways in which our buildings are lit, heated and used. Creating sustainable design solutions are among the most urgent issues for architects and designers. Find out how we can build in a greener way whilst integrating design, whether through new build or retro-fitting existing buildings.

Visit offices, school and community buildings like the City Academy (p34), Brookhill Children's Centre (p31) and Roots and Shoots (p47), as well as new build homes Eds Shed (p33), the development at 188 Portland Road (p44) and many retro-fitted eco-homes such as Sherland Road (p52), 89 Culford Road (p33) and Retro-eco house (p55). Also check out the Sponge eco-tour (see p67) for what is happening in West London. Look out for the green dot against building listings for Eco Exemplars or the G for Green Features at buildings.

Open House also works in partnership with a number of organisations to help embed green design and thinking into our everyday lives:

Camden walking mapguide – showing how to walk the borough year-round, get healthy, see some great buildings and lead the way in making a greener, cleaner, well-designed city. Launched as part of Car Free Day in Camden on 11 September and created by LB Camden in association with Open House and Legible London. For details on how to obtain a copy of this pamphlet see openhouse.org.uk/green

Green Building Guide – looking at how to plan, design and live sustainably in the 21st Century by exploring all the different aspects of what makes a building 'green'. In association with sustain' magazine and the UK Green Building Council. For details on how to obtain a copy of this pamphlet see openhouse.org.uk/green

The Mayor of London's Skyride also takes place on Sunday 20 September – why not get on your bike and experience central London car-free, and then cycle to some Open House buildings. See goskyride.com/london

Also new this year is our cycling route competition. Devise a bike-friendly route between Open House buildings, submit to us before the event, and the winning routes will be published on our website and win a fantastic prize! See openhouse.org.uk/green for details and how to enter.

Display energy certificates – look out for the certificates – which give an A to G energy efficiency rating – in large public buildings opening their doors for Open House London this year.

Subscription offer from sustain' magazine for Open House London visitors

As Media partner to Open House London 2009, sustain' magazine is offering a concessionary subscription rate of just £38 per year, a saving of 33% (£19) on the standard rate. Reimagining Buildings:

Talk at Wilton's Music Hall

Monday 14 September, 6:30pm-8:15pm

Wilton's Music Hall, Graces Alley, Ensign Street E1 8BJ
Refreshments from 6:30pm; Talk at 7:15pm

Buildings, like people, undergo an ageing process. With their accumulation of scars and wrinkles, buildings can very often gain a quality that they lack upon completion, when shiny and new. In this talk at the oldest music hall in London to survive in its original form, author David Littlefield explores how elderly buildings can live so powerfully in the imagination. Tickets are free but pre-booking is required, go to openhouse.org.uk/spotlight

Attend Open House London in style...

Friday 18 or Saturday 19 September

Photography competition: 'Juxtaposition'

Open House invites you to photograph a building or an aspect of a building you have visited during Open House London 2009. Capture the essence of this year's theme 'Juxtaposition' and be in with a chance of winning your image as a large, mounted print. Submitted photos may also be used in future Open House publicity. Entries will be judged by our expert panel – renowned architectural photographers Grant Smith and Morley von Sternberg and Guardian picture editor Marissa Keating. Our website openhouse.org.uk/competition has full details of all categories, criteria, terms and how to enter.

Here's a map to help you find your way around London, and as a reference to the following borough sections. Also see contents, left.

What will I find when I get to the buildings?

At many of the 700 sites, there will be someone to show you around and answer your questions. These are the Open House guides and stewards, and there are thousands of them – some professional, some amateur enthusiast, all volunteering their time and knowledge. In recognition of their role their badge enables them to gain priority access to buildings apart from those that are pre-booking only. For information about volunteering in 2010, please email volunteers@openhouse.org.uk.

Will I get to meet any of the architects?

Look out for the entries marked with a code A throughout this guide and in the index; it means that architects will be giving talks and tours of some of the buildings they've designed. There are a staggering 1600 tours being given by architects this year in total. Where there is a bright green A flagged up in the guide you will also find the practice director on site. Also, some of their studios/offices will be open, so that you can see the projects they're working on. Sometimes you can also meet the property owner who will also appreciate your positive feedback!

Don't forget to look out for the factsheets too which will be available at most buildings.

How do I find out more about the buildings and how to get around?

See openhouse.org.uk/london

The website is your other resource for your planning. It builds on the information you see in this programme. There are interactive searches for period of architecture, type of building, name of architect or geographical location. You can see where buildings are located and plan your route between them, using the handy map-based interface. All pre-bookings taken through Open House operate on here. There are images and factsheets for most entries. A link to live travel news from TfL will let you know about planned engineering works. The website also gives you further information on many of our other programmes, and allows you to order copies of this guide and other Open House publications.

What info can I find in this programme?

Each building and walk entry contains address, opening days and hours, access to visitors, pre-booking details where relevant, amenities and transport, with bus numbers listed at the end. A brief description and the name of the architect, plus any special events or themes are also given. See key listing below right. All main areas are open to the public unless otherwise stated.

Also note the colour-coded arrows indicating opening days! Blue means open Saturday only, pink means Sunday only, purple means both days! See key below right.

Stop Press

Please do try to check this! From 16 September amendments, additions and withdrawals to the list of participating buildings will be available by visiting the Open House website. Online listings will be kept up to date throughout.

Do I need to book?

Entry to a few of the properties will require you to book in advance. Where this is through the building contact details are given. Bookings administered by Open House are indicated. These have to be made via our website, and openhouse.org.uk/generalinfo has full details of the booking process, how to place your booking (which is through our online search listings) and how to release bookings. Spaces are limited and are on a strictly first come, first served basis. Open House regrets that we cannot guarantee availability of places. As places on these tours are restricted please ensure that you attend.

NOTE: online pre-booking is only open from 10 August – 16 September unless otherwise stated.

How can I get another copy of the programme?

Copies can be bought from:

- openhouse.org.uk/shop
- Britain & London Visitor Centre, 1 Lower Regent Street SW1
- Tate Modern, Bankside SE1
- The Building Centre, Store Street WC1
- RIBA bookshop, 66 Portland Place W1
- Copies can be picked up free from participating local London libraries, subject to availability.

Can you tell me about access for visitors with disabilities?

This year Open House is again working in partnership with Artsline, the disability information service, to provide online access information for the event. Where buildings have supplied this information, it can be seen on artsline.org.uk/openhouse so that visitors can prepare for a successful and enjoyable visit. Please note, the Artsline office is not able to provide other general information.

This Guide is also available in large print formats by emailing admin@openhouse.org.uk

VocalEyes Audio Described Tours

This year blind and partially sighted people will have the rare opportunity to go on VocalEyes audio described tours of Haberdashers Hall, BBC Bush House, Foreign Office and Johnson Building. Each tour will be led by one of their describers with a representative from the building or the building's designers. Contact VocalEyes on 020 7375 1043, email toby@vocaleyes.co.uk or visit vocaleyes.co.uk to find out more and book. VocalEyes is a national charity providing access to the arts through audio description. Supported by The Greater London Fund for the Blind

What are the terms of entry?

Open House London is a free event in which all sections of the community are invited to participate. Please note that each building's opening, security arrangements and refusal of entry are controlled by individual owners, and entry to each building is on terms and at times specified, over 19 & 20 September 2009. Participation in events and activities is at your own risk. Information in this guide is provided by contributors. Open House has taken all reasonable care to verify the information provided and cannot accept responsibility for any variation from the details published here. Please do respect building owners and their privacy, and be mindful of photo-taking.

Disclaimer: Neither Open House nor the leader or organiser of any event, activity or walk advertised here or on the Open House website nor any other programme listing, print or electronic, shall be held liable for the death or injury, accident or damage to the person or property (including theft or loss) of any event participant or any guest or any person occurring during or arising from participation in any of the events advertised in the Open House London programme.

Where else in the world can I find Open House events?

Open House cities also now include New York, Dublin and Galway.

openhousenewyork is 10-11 October

Open House Dublin is 8-11 October

Open House Galway is 16-18 October

Open House London is London's independent contribution to the European Heritage Days initiative which takes place across 48 countries. For details of events across the UK in September for Heritage Open Days visit www.heritageopendays.org.uk

The dates for Open House London in 2010 are 18 & 19 September

Camden Building Quality Awards 2009

This is Camden's 4th bi-annual Building Quality Awards which celebrates the building and construction industry in the borough and beyond through Camden's Partner Authority Scheme arrangement (PAS). These awards compliment the Camden Design Awards by focusing on the quality of construction and the construction process rather than just the design aspects of the built environment. The Building Regulations are constantly changing and issues around sustainability and inclusive design are of particular importance.

The City Churches

47 churches within the City of London, the vast majority of which will be open; some of the oldest buildings and the largest enclosed spaces in the Square Mile.

→ Sat/Sun, times vary.

The range of styles includes Norman, pre-fire Medieval, Sir Christopher Wren's greatest masterpieces, through to rebuilding after WWII and modern re-workings of ancient spaces. Hidden inside are famous monuments, stained glass, paintings and fittings by some of the greatest artists of their day, donated over the centuries by City figures. The three churches listed below give some idea of the range available. Full details for each church will appear on the Open House website and a list of opening times will also be available from St Paul's Information Centre, and from each church during the weekend. Regular tours will take place at most churches every half hour or similar.

St Helen Bishopsgate – Great St Helen's EC3A 6AT

Sat 10am-5pm/Sun 2pm-4pm. Regular tours, first come basis.

One of the few City buildings to survive the Great Fire of London and dates from 1210 onwards. Unusual double nave with the best pre-Great Fire collection of monuments in any London parish church. Damaged by two terrorist bombs in the 1990s, then extensively and controversially reordered by Quinlan Terry.

St Mary-le-Bow – Cheapside EC2V 6AU

Sat/Sun 10am-5pm. Regular tours, first come basis.

Founded by William the Conqueror's Archbishop Lanfranc in 1080 (of which the highly significant crypt largely survives) St Mary-le-Bow was rebuilt several times, most notably by Wren after the Great Fire and again by Laurence King in 1964 after WWII destruction to Wren's design. Home of the Bow Bells.

St Stephen Walbrook – Walbrook EC4N 8BN

Sat/Sun 9am-6pm. Informal tours 10am-4pm.

Wren's own parish church with the building personally supervised by him in 1672. Within a rectangular outline is nested a square space defined by twelve columns and covered by a huge dome. Controversial central stone altar by Henry Moore installed in 1987. Birthplace of the Samaritans

Hackney Design Awards

The Hackney Design Awards are held every two years and reflect the increasing awareness of high quality contemporary design in the borough. The 2008 Awards attracted 36 entries of which 20 were shortlisted, resulting in 4 winners (including the Hothouse building, Adelaide Wharf housing and the Shoreditch Prototype house), 2 commendations and 4 mentions. Nominations came from architects and building owners but also from individual residents and school pupils. This diversity of interest is at the heart of what the Awards are about – recognising and celebrating the inspiration that good design can bring to the lives of people in our community

Jane Priestman OBE Hon FRIBA
Chair of Trustees, Open House

“Open House highlights the value of good design and aims to open eyes and minds to the city’s wealth of architecture. Through our programmes we hope to challenge perceptions, break down barriers and inspire people to demand better design for current and future generations.”

London voices

“Buildings are a large part of society and I think it is wonderful that it is possible to share them in more ways than just photos or on the internet. Open House illustrates far more than an image, and shows to everyone how important good design is, and what an impact it can make.”

“We should have more pride in the beautiful built environment in London. This is only fostered by greater knowledge of and exposure to the buildings themselves.”

The Open House London 2009 event is only possible through the support of the following organisations
