Welcome to the 2010 edition of the Open House London annual event guide. Open House London is London's largest architectural showcase and a major initiative by Open-City, the new name of the organisation formerly known as Open House

A new era for our organisation

Open House London is the capital's greatest architectural showcase: a truly city-wide celebration of the buildings, places and neighbourhoods where we live, work and play.

This year the event celebrates its 18th birthday and coming of age. Since 1992, however, the organisation that created this groundbreaking event has grown to include research, training, advice and campaigns on the built environment that impact on the whole city. Over the years our aim has always been to raise awareness of the difference that well-designed buildings and public spaces can make to the quality of everyday life in every London neighbourhood and community.

So in March 2010 we changed the name of our organisation from 'Open House' to 'Open-City' ... but our best-known initiative, the world-renowned Open House London Annual Event, keeps its unique name and identity.

In this year's edition of the Open House London annual programme you'll find interviews, insights and more about Open-City's role and influence in education and policy-making as well as information on our activities and events year round – and of course all the highlights of the 2010 Weekend, for which our theme is 'our buildings, our neighbourhoods, our city'.

In 2010 we have another cause for celebration as we welcome Tel Aviv, Barcelona and Chicago as the latest cities alongside New York and Dublin to join the Open House 'family' – adopting the unique concept that started here in London.

A round-up of Open-City's recent work in championing good design across London

More than 170 Planning Councillors are better equipped to assess the quality of design proposals thanks to Open-City's Exemplar programme of 25 in-depth masterclasses since 2005.

In 2009, the specialist expertise of Open-City's Art in the Open programme was recognised through invitation to partner on the Mayor's Great Spaces scheme.

Open-City created the first design awareness training programme for a London borough residents' design panel in autumn 2009.

Over the last year, My City Too's programme of research has gathered the views of 1500 young people on what they want for better spaces and places in London.

Art in the Open's relationship with the Olympic Delivery Authority Arts and Culture Team has influenced quality and good practice for the new commissions for the Olympic Park, making a major contribution to its legacy.

In the past year, My City Too, supported by the Department for Education and City Bridge Trust, has trained focus groups of young people in 5 London boroughs to help inform long-term decision-making about future public spaces in the capital.

The Open-City Education Fund business and skills development initiative has, since spring 2009, brought together senior practitioners in architecture, engineering and construction to debate issues including sustainable design and effective stakeholder engagement.

Open-City's 4-day-long Summer Architecture Academy 2010, with Lend Lease as Principal Sponsor, is the only project of its kind – giving 150 young people the chance to experience a 'hands-on' taster of the many different careers in the built environment.

What our supporters say

"Derwent London is all about good design and Open-City offers a constructive resource to raise the quality of our environment."

Simon Silver, Director and Head of Regeneration, Derwent London

"Open-City's role in architecture education, environmental design research and collaboration with the built environment profession makes it a powerful connecting force. Its focus on integrated partnerships is one of the key reasons Atkins supports its work..."

Keith Clarke, Chief Executive, Atkins

"Lend Lease fully supports programmes and activities that provide a platform that encourages the next generation to take interest in the built environment. We recognise that programmes like Open-City's Summer Academy are essential to inspire and galvanise many in making positive contributions. We are proud to be this year's Principal Sponsor."

Nick Forwood, Head of New Business, Lend Lease

Open-City offers hands-on, active collaboration and integrated partnerships, and is successful in attracting sponsorship and support from the private sector, government, trusts and foundations. To find out more about how you could support Open-City contact development@open-city.org.uk

What makes a liveable city?

Kieran Long, Architecture Critic for the Evening Standard, gives Open-City his perspective on the power of architecture in making successful neighbourhoods

What makes a liveable city? We should all know the answer to this question. But think about it. What is a city for? When we build, what are we building, exactly?

Contemporary architecture should make the city a better place, more civilised, and a more meaningful background to our daily lives. We make buildings to make more of the things we like about our cities, and less of the things we don't.

We know when a bit of city works well. People are able to work near to where they live and socialise, they can bring up their children with generous and beautiful places for them to play in and confidence in their security. Buildings of character in a dense and varied grain make a difference, and streets with lots of activity can be balanced with residential neighbourhoods which provide a refuge.

The places in London that we love are rarely planned as a whole: they have emerged organically through development that respects precedents and adds new dimensions. Take Bloomsbury, Notting Hill, Soho, Hampstead or Shoreditch. All of them have some great buildings, and even some great urban set pieces: squares, streets, garden suburbs, intimate warehouse quarters. But common to all of them is how new development, and new and inventive ways of using old buildings, have reanimated them. This process of renewal is typical of London, particularly in the last ten years. That process has created great places for people to walk around, get lost in, meet friends, read a book, shop, get married, get drunk etc.

Most of the architecture we see today was created by the forces of commerce, but has a generosity towards the city that might reside in the glazed bricks of a pub façade or the advertising outside a cinema. These are the things that affect our experience of the city the most: the care taken with details that tell us something about the time they were made or the people who made them.

Developers and architects are more aware than they have been for generations of the need for density of use and richness of experience. But the results, too often, do not reflect this awareness. Much contemporary urban development is the city in drag – buildings full of tiny flats with chain stores on their ground floors, masquerading as active, animated parts of town.

Open House weekend allows us to directly experience great architecture, but this year's theme, 'our buildings, our neighbourhoods, our city', invites us to focus on architecture and design that contributes something to the city in general, and to our daily lives as citizens. We can learn how architecture at its best creates a layered, complex and meaningful relationship between the interiors of buildings and the public realm, mediating the private and the public.

The Open-City organisation can help politicians and the public to be clear about what makes a great city. We must not just accept what we are offered, but strive to ensure the best happens in every neighbourhood. The contemporary city should be thick with architecture that makes a contribution. If we can take seriously the things that we have so often forgotten about (a well-thought-out threshold, a beautiful door handle, mature trees, great signage, beautiful lighting), we can help our neighbourhoods become enduringly civilised places.

We must not accept what we are offered, but strive to ensure the best happens in every neighbourhood

What is Open-City?

Victoria Thornton, the founding director of Open-City, explains why the organisation behind Open House London has changed its name and how it is moving forward...

On 26 March this year, Open House became Open-City. What does this mean and how would you describe your organisation?

The change reflects the scope of the initiatives that we are involved in now. We started in 1992 as a small, not-for-profit organisation to promote public awareness and appreciation of the capital's architecture. The intention was to open up London's exemplary buildings to the general public who don't otherwise have access. We saw direct experience as one of the key ways of helping the wider community to become more knowledgeable, engage in dialogue and make informed judgements on architecture.

But over the past 18 years, our work and influence have expanded to include research, advice, guidance, training and campaigns in which industry professionals participate and learn alongside politicians and the wider community – including young people, who are the clients of the future. We're also the only organisation that covers the whole of London so we needed a name that better conveys how we work now.

We're a completely independent, not-for-profit organisation. We are not a consultancy, thinktank or lobbying group. Over many years we've developed excellent relationships with architectural practices – both large and small – and so have built up a real, in-depth understanding of design. In essence, we exist to champion the value of good design, giving everyone a deeper understanding of its values.

What do you see as Open-City's main role?

Our main role is advocacy. We help challenge perceptions, break down barriers and inspire people to demand high-quality design in their local neighbourhood. And it is the success of our approach as an advocacy body that has made us a progressive and influential authority in this area. As an organisation working with every London borough, we can bring our expertise to help solve issues at a local as well as regional level.

Why do you think it's important for people – especially young people – to learn more about and understand the built environment?

The urban fabric of our community has such a strong impact on us, but we never learn about it in schools. Also architecture and public spaces are created without the public's involvement. Essentially a community has no choice but to hope that those who are responsible for creating and developing a space will do so in its best interests. So our mantra is that this must become part of our education system, and Open-City attempts to do just that.

Over the past decade, our architecture in schools and youth programmes have enabled thousands of young people aged 7–18 to begin to understand and engage with current built environment issues – such as sustainability and housing – that are relevant to their own experience of the city. Architecture is such a powerful tool for learning because it crosses so many different disciplines.

Your organisation plays an important role in getting different groups and professions together, such as councillors and architects, to explore and debate design issues. Why is this important?

Collaborating with different parts of society ensures that the dialogue is open, educational and creative. With professionals we can unpack how design is vital in making good places that work. But we also connect with hundreds of thousands of Londoners, giving them a forum to express what they would like for their city. Participants in all our programmes learn from one another as much as from experts.

We felt from early on that it was important to include the stakeholders in the dialogue – the ‘gatekeepers’ to good-quality design – such as planning councillors. So we ask them how we can better help them to articulate the challenges they face so they can make the best-informed decisions. Programmes such as Open-City Exemplar provide vital support to councillors in their design arbiter role by giving them experience of developments, and by drawing out lessons about how good design can be encouraged, assessed and delivered. The Exemplar masterclasses, for example, bring together planning councillors from both inner and outer London, allowing them to share knowledge and debate differences of opinion about what is good and bad design.

In essence, we exist to champion the value of good design, giving everyone a deeper understanding of its values

How exactly do you see the role of built environment professionals in these discussions?

It is important to involve professionals in the dialogue. Everyone plays a relevant part. We work with councillors to examine the design, which is the abstract, and ask what the reality is. Being able to read between the abstract and the real puts them in a better informed position to give planning permission. The reality is the space in which the building planning takes place. That’s why it’s important to involve architects, engineers, developers and other professionals.

Core to our beliefs and values is having direct experience. You can’t make an informed decision merely through abstract images, such as photos and illustrations. Having these professionals meet on site to impart their different insights, look at what is viable or assess the fabric of a building or public space can result in a positive outcome. We also support professionals and decision-makers on an ongoing basis through guidance, for example our Art in the Open web resource, which offers extensive advice and resources for developing strategies for successful places.

In this challenging economic climate, how do you see Open-City supporting the industry?

We’re renowned for our collaborative approach, and our expertise in raising debate on current issues of concern in the built environment. We’re also at the heart of one of the most diverse and engaged groups of design and property professionals – and of course, because we are independent, we are an organisation that people trust.

But where we believe we really can support the profession from a business point of view is through our unique insights and ‘intelligence’ garnered over 18 years: into how councillors understand ‘good design’, into what young people want for the built environment and the best ways to engage and inspire them, and into how to enrich public spaces by raising the quality of art in the public realm.

You’ve also carried out extensive research on public attitudes to architectural design. Some of your polls ask controversial questions, such as whether Prince Charles is good for British architecture. Are controversial issues important to tackle?

With more than 350,000 visits to Open House London every year, we have a huge and diverse community. This represents a large section of society – and we feel that it’s important that we capture the insights and viewpoints of as many people as possible, since the results inform our own programmes and support what matters most: producing a more informed debate.

Our position is not one of confrontation or consultation, but one of engagement to determine the real issues. For example, web polls provide an opportunity for individuals to comment and elaborate their viewpoints. This way you get to the heart of the issue.

What would you like to achieve in the next couple of years?

Success for us would be a society in which there is a more informed, intelligent debate from the government to the grassroots in every community and neighbourhood. Currently, I think there is that gap, so for us it’s vital to assist that translation between those sections of society and to bring them together.

The economy and other issues are very much on everyone's minds in these challenging times and the world of architecture is no exception. In this context, we asked the Open-City community to give us their view on...

Why good design still matters in making great cities

Stephen Witherford, Chris Watson & William Mann, Directors, Witherford Watson Mann Architects
Victor Hugo describes the city as a kind of geological formation. Good buildings crystallise values: how things are made and people act. Generations of architecture make the platform for the rich diversity of human life—that's what we experience in great cities.

Ace, 17 year old resident of Tower Hamlets

Tower Hamlets, the area where I live in London, feels like home because of the safety and security that new developments have brought to the local borough. As I've got older the improvements in the design of public spaces have meant now there is a wider variety of things to do and many relaxing places to enjoy. This has helped to have less cultural clash in the city: learning and spending time with people from different backgrounds makes life easier and makes me feel like I'm part of a bigger family in London.

Christine Cohen OBE Deputy, The City of London Corporation

The built environment directly affects how people feel about the city and how they behave. Great buildings relate to the space around them which, if well designed, adds to the enjoyment of work and life.

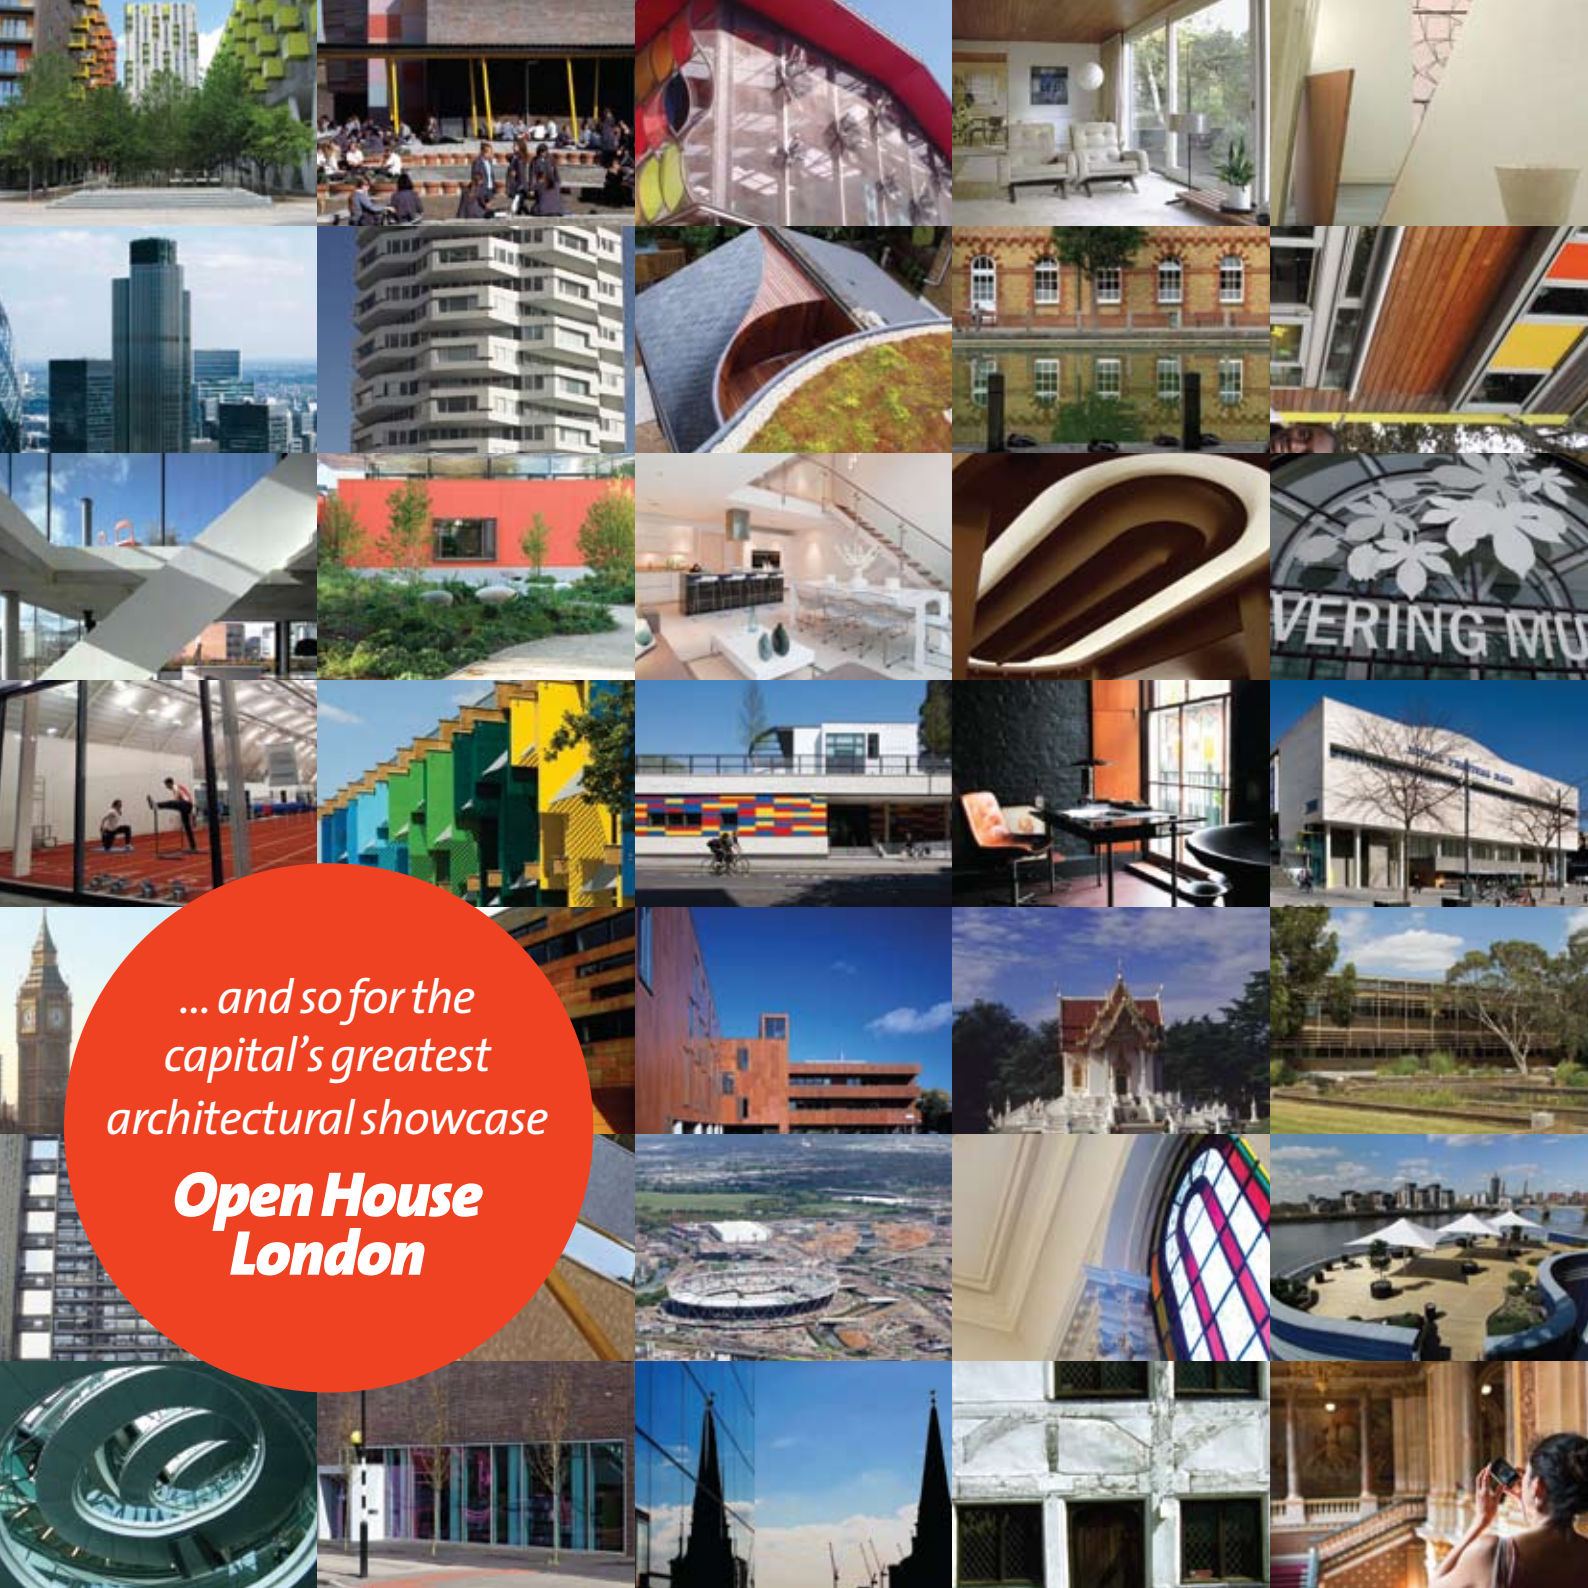

Paul Monaghan, Partner, Allford Hall Monaghan Morris

Architecture and civilisation have always been closely linked. The DNA of any culture is measured by the architectural ambition of its city's keepers. The world's most successful cities will always allow dynamic change in the built fabric with which follows commercial and cultural success.

Year 5 Pupils, 10 years old, at Elmgrove Middle School

London is great, its buildings make it a really nice place to live. There are always loads of things going on and things to see nearby. We like living in a city especially because we can see all of our friends really easily... they all live right around the corner. We think it's really important that we keep the city nice and that grown ups design it well!

Open House London Weekend 2010

The following pages bring you what's fresh this year and special highlights on our theme of 'Our buildings, our neighbourhoods, our city'. Here, some of our supporters share their thoughts on why Open House London 2010 is not to be missed

"The contrasts of London's architecture are the genius of its beauty. No other city in the world brings together so well the historic and the new, or can delight the eye with a range of styles from Corinthian marble to Modernist steel. Open House London celebrates this wonderful melange, and gives Londoners a rare insight into the best of our buildings. I fully support its work and wish it every success."

Boris Johnson, Mayor of London

"Science's place in society has never been more important, not least in the way we plan, design and build cities. I am therefore delighted that during our 350th anniversary year, we are working with Open-City to highlight the important connections between science, architecture, technology and design."

Martin Rees, President, Royal Society

"One of my favourite events of the year, Open House offers the unparalleled opportunity to step inside the capital's most interesting buildings. The vast selection of buildings on offer span from the peculiar to the paramount. This is a first class education in architecture, and it's free."

Christine Murray, Editor, Architects Journal

"British Land is pleased to be a Supporter of Open-City and looks forward to welcoming visitors to our City and West End office buildings. The design and ongoing management of the offices are based on the needs of the occupier and we are pleased to have the opportunity to explain the wider benefits of choosing architecture that enhances the existing streetscape, and implements the latest in sustainable development."

Paul Burgess, Head of London Leasing, British Land

"Grand, famous, small, obscure, London's buildings open for us this weekend. What I find really exciting though is an insight into sometimes extraordinary personal spaces. One's spirit is totally lifted by the experience."

Margaret Howell, Fashion Designer

"When Open House throws open the portals of so many otherwise inaccessible London buildings, it also opens our eyes to the surprising variety of architectures in our midst and our minds to infinite possibilities of the built environment. For years now we have covered this staggeringly successful cultural event on my daily show. With Open House, Londoners learn a little more about the city we share."

Our buildings, our neighbourhoods, our city

Good design is vital in creating and sustaining a vibrant city. Open House London is your opportunity to get out and get under the skin of the amazing architecture in every London neighbourhood. Find out more about issues that are relevant to your local area – from the design of homes to the impact of climate change, and the role of architects and contemporary design in revitalising places. There are over 700 buildings, neighbourhood walks, architects' talks, cycle tours and more all over London to choose from in the main directory, from major landmarks such as BT Tower, to small private homes and everything in between. Here are just a few highlights of things to see and do...

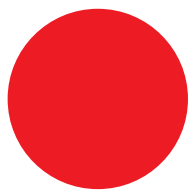

Your neighbourhood, your London

Open House is unique in that you can experience great architecture in the flesh, but what about the public art, the spaces and pockets of housing in our communities? Our neighbourhood walks help give this insight. Have a look at the Golden Lane Estate (p27), SuperCroydon suburbs (p28), and Progress Estate (p32) walks, the St Helier Estate talk (p57), plus special events on local areas all over London such as the Drayton (p40), Jestico + Whiles (p22) and Theis + Kahn (p33) exhibitions. Look in the main listings for the orange dots and neighbourhood walks and tours sections.

Design for living

With over 50 private homes of all kinds showcased, Open House is your opportunity to get an insiders' view of great domestic design and tips from the experts. There's also lots of interesting housing to show how we live. See the groundbreaking 60s Span developments (p52) for several houses plus the Alton Estate (p61) and historic winner of housing design awards St Bernards (p28). The contemporary challenge is to deliver quality homes that bring value to an area and meet government-led design criteria, and architects Levitt Bernstein are showing what they achieved in the Queensbridge Quarter (p34), while architect Philip Marsh of dRMM leads a tour of Elephant and Castle's Gardland Court (p56). Look for the yellow dots for other examples of housing. Blue dots mean school exemplars such as The City Academy (p34) or Teddington School (p53), and purple is for workspaces like Blue Fin Building (p54) or One Bishops Square (p58).

Making great places

Well-designed public spaces can have a major impact on the success of a neighbourhood. Explore improvements to landscape and public realm on the Exhibition Road (p45) and Woolwich (p32) regeneration walks with the borough officers and planners, Arnold Circus community park (p34) with the landscape designers, the Old Street transformation with Simon Henley of HHR and Tonkin Liu's Promenade of Light followed by a community bbq (p43), tours in Barking and Barking Riverside (p16) and a tour of quirky public 'pavement' art in Notting Hill with the artist (p45). Look for the red dots for all examples of public space and public art. Changes are happening all over the city with regeneration on every scale. Site tours of the Olympic site (p50) are taking place, plus see the site of the new Tate Modern Extension (p56). Also check our new London Boroughs section of the site, openhouselondon.org.uk/boroughs, for an insight into projects in planning and in progress, and an overview of each area.

Be the first to hear about Integrated Art for the Olympic Park

Increasingly artists are working with architects, masterplanners and regeneration experts to create better places all over London. A series of integrated art commissions are being developed for the Olympic Park in Stratford, east London. They will help to make it a world class cultural destination for both Londoners and visitors long after the London 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games are over. This is a chance to hear from some of the commissioned artists about their work in conversation with Sarah Weir, Head of Arts and Cultural Strategy at the Olympic Delivery Authority. Talks take place at View Tube. See p50 for full details.

Local green living

Being green is a way of life, and the eco-credentials of our homes, offices and schools are a vital part of this. Good green design is about more than 'eco-bling', and retrofits of existing buildings are becoming much more important. Have a look at The Coach House (p23), 39 Parkholme Road (p33), Retro-eco House (p55) and Zero Carbon Loft (p29) or for new builds Mayville Community Centre (p43), currently under construction with eco-technologies, or Redriff Children's Centre (p55) and BEECHE (p19). Several of the houses will have Energy Saving Trust advisors and guidance material on hand to provide more in-depth support on ways to reduce your domestic carbon emissions. Also look out for the green dot against listings for Green Exemplars or the G for green features.

Sustainable cities – an issue for the experts?

Part of the challenge in being green is how specialists, such as scientists, engineers and architects, can work with one another and with the wider community to design cities that are environmentally and socially sustainable. The Open House and Royal Society panel discussion "Our buildings, our neighbourhoods, our cities?" on Mon 13 Sept will explore this issue. Alok Jha of the Guardian will be joined by Professor Alan Penn of the Bartlett School of Graduate Studies, Professor Jeremy Watson of Arup, Anna Coote of New Economics Foundation, Rab Bennetts of Bennetts Associates and Dr Janet Barlow of Reading University. See p67 for full details.

Also thanks to our partnership with the Royal Society in their 350th anniversary year, you've an opportunity to discover science through architecture. We are showcasing science-related buildings from headquarters of great societies to working laboratories. Look for the navy dots!

Green and healthy ways to get about London

Walking or cycling between buildings on Open House weekend is the perfect way to stay healthy, see some great architecture and help to make a greener, cleaner, well-designed city. Check out our cycling tours – architect Cany Ash is leading a tour of around Hackney (p34), whilst Benedict O’Looney will bike about Peckham (p56). Keep checking the website for additional bike tours. Also check out the many neighbourhood walks listed at the end of each borough section. Cyclists can join our architecture on your bike group on facebook (facebook.com/bikearchitecture) to share bike-friendly routes between Open House buildings, other tips, and to win cool stuff.

Your chance to meet the experts

Look out for the entries marked with a code A throughout this guide; it means that architects will be giving talks and tours of some of the buildings they’ve designed such as at Krishna Avanti School (p38), or at the City of London Information Centre (25). There are a staggering 1600 tours being given by architects of their buildings this year in total. Also, some of their studios/offices will be open, so that you can see and discuss with them the projects that they’re working on.

Young Londoners’ campaign for better spaces and places

Open-City’s My City Too Young Ambassadors want to find out what you think about derelict local spaces. Over the weekend they will be taking to the streets in a Routemaster bus, parked up outside Peckham Space on Saturday and Hackney Empire on Sunday. They will be asking the whole community to respond to their Young Londoners’ manifesto point “We want every inch of the capital to be used and not left derelict”. Answers will be collated and sent to London’s policy-makers. Get involved and find out more at open-city.org.uk/mycitytoo

Competitions and other cool stuff

Archi-bus tour

This year, we are working with Arriva to bring you a bus tour with a difference. Win a place on an architectural whirlwind tour by historic Routemaster bus (itself an amazing piece of architectural design), kicking off with an exclusive tour of BT Tower, and taking in other Open House buildings, with commentary by Royal College of Art tutor and bus driver Joe Kerr! Places are limited so to be in with a chance to win a place on this half day tour on Sunday afternoon, answer this: In what year was the Routemaster launched? Answers to bustour@open-city.org.uk by Fri 4 Sept by 6pm. Winners will be notified.

Win an overnight stay at 5* Grosvenor House Friday 17 or Saturday 18 September

Grosvenor House are offering a competition to enjoy an overnight stay for two in a deluxe room at their London AJW Marriott Hotel (www.londongrosvenorhouse.co.uk). Champagne Rose Tea for two will be served in the Park Room on arrival. After a relaxing night in the hotel and a delicious breakfast the winner will enjoy exploring Open House London. To enter, answer this question: who was the consultant engineer to the Grosvenor Estate? Answers to competition@open-city.org.uk by 6pm Thurs 26 August. Winner will be the first correct answer drawn at random and will be informed Fri 27 August. Grosvenor House will also be giving Open House tours during the event (p63).

What info can I find in this programme?

In this programme you can find listings for each building and event with address, opening days and hours, access for visitors, pre-booking details where relevant, amenities and transport, with bus numbers listed at the end. See also list of icons and abbreviations, opposite. All main areas are open to the public unless otherwise stated. Also note the colour-coded arrows indicating opening days. Blue means open Saturday only, pink means Sunday only, double purple means both days.

Do I need to book?

Entry to a few of the properties will require you to book in advance. Where this is through the building contact details are given. Bookings administered by Open House are indicated. For bookings through Open House visit openhouselondon.org.uk/bookings for details of how to make your booking through our web listings and how to release bookings. Spaces are limited and are on a strictly first come, first served basis. Open House regrets that we cannot guarantee availability of places. As places on these tours are restricted please ensure that you attend. Open House is unable to take bookings by phone. NOTE: pre-booking is only open from 10am 9 August – 15 September unless otherwise stated.

What will I find when I get to the buildings?

At many of the 700 sites, there will be someone to show you around and answer your questions. These are the Open House guides and stewards, and there are thousands of them – some professional, some amateur enthusiast, all volunteering their time and knowledge. In recognition of their role their badge enables them to gain priority access to buildings apart from those that are pre-booking only. For information about volunteering in 2011, please email volunteers@open-city.org.uk.

How do I find out more about the buildings and how to get around?

See openhouselondon.org.uk

The website is your other resource for your activity planning. It builds on the information you see in this programme. It has the most up to date listings including listings of all churches. You can search for period of architecture, type of building, name of architect or geographical location. You can see where buildings are located and plan your route between them, using the handy map-based interface. All pre-bookings taken through Open House operate on here except where specified. There are images and factsheets for most entries. The website also gives you further information on many of our other programmes, and allows you to order further copies of this programme and other related publications.

Can you tell me about access for visitors with disabilities?

This year Open House is again working in partnership with Artsline, the disability information service, to provide online access information for the event. Where buildings have supplied this information, it can be seen on artsline.org.uk/openhouse so that visitors can prepare for a successful and enjoyable visit. Please note, the Artsline office is not able to provide other general information. Several buildings are also offering BSL tours, see listings.

This guide is also available in large print formats by emailing admin@open-city.org.uk

Stop Press

Please do try to check this! From 15 Sept amendments, additions and withdrawals to the list of buildings will be available by visiting the Open House London website. Online listings will be kept up to date throughout.

What are the terms of entry?

Open House London is a free event in which all sections of the community are invited to participate. Please note that each building's opening, security arrangements and refusal of entry are controlled by individual owners, and entry to each building is on terms and at times specified over 18 & 19 September 2010. Participation in events and activities is at your own risk. Information in this guide is provided by contributors. Open-City has taken all reasonable care to verify the information provided and cannot accept responsibility for any variation from the details published here. Please do respect building owners and their privacy, and be mindful of photo-taking.

Disclaimer: Neither Open-City nor the leader or organiser of any event, activity or walk advertised here or on the Open-City website nor any other programme listing, print or electronic, shall be held liable for the death or injury, accident or damage to the person or property (including theft or loss) of any event participant or any guest or any person occurring during or arising from participation in any of the events advertised in the Open House London events programme.

How can I get another copy of the programme?

Copies can be bought from:

- open-city.org.uk/shop
- Britain & London Visitor Centre, 1 Lower Regent Street SW1
- The Building Centre, Store Street WC1
- RIBA bookshop, 66 Portland Place W1
- Foyles - Flagship Store, 113-119 Charing Cross Road, WC2; Royal Festival Hall, Southbank Centre, SE1; St Pancras International, Euston Road, N1; Westfield London, White City, W12

The City Churches

➤ Sat/Sun, times vary.

There are 42 churches within the City of London, the range of styles includes Norman, pre-fire Medieval, Wren's masterpieces and modern reworkings. Four churches are listed here. A full list will be available from the City of London Information Centre, St Paul's Churchyard EC4M 8BX and from each church during the weekend.

St Helen Bishopsgate – Great St Helen's EC3A 6AT

Sat 10am-5pm/Sun 1pm-3.30pm.

One of the few City buildings to survive the Great Fire of London and dates from 1210 onwards. Unusual double nave with the best pre-Great Fire collection of monuments in any London parish church. Damaged by two terrorist bombs in the 1990s, then extensively and reordered by Quinlan Terry.

St Mary Abchurch – Abchurch Yard EC4N 7BA

Sat 10am-5pm/Sun 10am-1pm.

A Medieval church destroyed in the Great Fire was replaced by Wren with the present building in 1681. An internal dome forty feet across was painted in 1708 by William Snow depicting the worship of Heaven. Fittings are mainly 17C woodwork attributed to Grinling Gibbons.

St Mary-le-Bow – Cheapside EC2V 6AU

Sat/Sun 10am-5pm.

Founded by William the Conqueror's Archbishop Lanfranc in 1080 (of which the highly significant crypt largely survives) St Mary-le-Bow was rebuilt several times, most notably by Wren after the Great Fire and again by Laurence King in 1964 after WWII destruction to Wren's design. Home of the Bow Bells.

St Stephen Walbrook – Walbrook EC4N 8BN

Sat/Sun 10am-4pm.

Wren's own parish church with the building personally supervised by him in 1672. Within a rectangular outline is nested a square space defined by twelve columns and covered by a huge dome. Controversial central stone altar by Henry Moore installed in 1987. Sir Christopher Wren 1672.

Streetscape work to transform Exhibition Road launched earlier this year in time for the 2012 Olympics and Paralympics. With London visitor numbers set to soar in 2012, millions will visit the area to take advantage of the free cultural activities at institutions including The Natural History Museum, The Science Museum and V&A. The project will reduce traffic congestion and provide visitors and residents with more pedestrian space and better access to enjoy the museums. This walk will also look at the Victorian architectural heritage and recent extensions to the museums including the Darwin Centre.
