Welcome to the 2011 edition of the Open House London annual event guide. Open House London is London's largest architecture showcase and a major initiative by Open-City, the capital's leading independent architecture organisation.

Celebrating the transformation of London

We believe passionately that great design makes a vital difference to our lives, and Open House London celebrates all that is best about the capital's buildings, places and neighbourhoods. You can visit the grandest of our public institutions, such as the Bank of England; or perhaps that little local gem of a building you have often walked past and wondered about. In either case, Open House London is one of the best ways to find out more about the buildings and spaces around you.

With less than a year to the start of the Olympic Games in London, we are in one of the most exciting periods of physical transformation the capital has seen for a very long time, as many new developments reach completion. Open-City as an organisation also has a special reason to look forward to 2012, the year in which we celebrate our 20th anniversary. As a charity dependent on volunteers and donations, and absolutely committed to our founding principle of free access for all citizens, we are seeking to build support to make 2012 the best year ever. If you would like to get your company or organisation to sponsor, contact us via open-city.org.uk/sponsorship.

As the world looks to London as the next Olympic city, we have been looking outwards: strengthening our links with the ever-expanding Open House 'family' of urban architecture showcases around the globe, from Chicago to Tel Aviv. Melbourne, Helsinki and Slovenia are the latest to join the growing movement born here in London.

In this 2011 edition of Open House London you can find out more about what Open-City has been doing over the past year to champion the value of good design in making a vibrant city, how we plan to celebrate our 20th anniversary, and, of course, all the highlights of the Weekend on 17 and 18 September, which this year has as its theme 'the liveable city'.

What has been happening since last year?

Some highlights of how the Open-City organisation has been championing the value of good design across London and beyond.

The national My Green School Eco-Design Competition challenged 7 to 12 year olds to come up with their own eco-friendly school building, with the winners showcased in an online gallery. Primary school students now learn about the link between climate change and the built environment by using our My Green School resources to investigate their school building.

Our new bespoke 'enabling' support service provides communities and local decision-makers with independent advice on design quality. It helps them develop the skills that they need to nurture change in their area at a time when many face constraints on their resources.

Our major London-wide poll last autumn revealed that people living and working in the capital felt excluded from the local planning process. Nearly two-thirds of the 1,000 people surveyed said that they do not have enough of a say in their local built environment, despite the fact that 98.2% thought it is important for their local area to be well designed.

Our Speaking Spaces Competition enabled teenagers to develop their leadership and presentation skills, by designing and delivering their own workshops on built environment issues to their younger peers in schools across London. The toolkit we developed has the potential to be used by thousands of young people around the UK.

Mayoral draft policy now acknowledges the role that art in the public realm can play in enriching the city, thanks to input by our Art in the Open initiative. The Mayor's Cultural Strategy was published at the end of 2010 and includes a detailed chapter on the public realm.

In May, the first-ever Open House Worldwide conference confirmed the international impact, appeal and relevance of the Open House concept that started in London in 1992. It brought together more than 100 delegates from Dublin, Barcelona, New York and many other cities that have become part of the hugely successful Open House global 'family'.

"Open-City's My City Too is proof that young people have a big role to play not only defining their own space in the city, but helping shape the city to be more inclusive for the rest of us."

Finn Williams, Urban Designer, Croydon Council

"It is really important that young people make their views known as many planning and development decisions will affect a community for years to come. Initiatives such as My City Too will help them to understand the differing priorities and pressures and will make them more effective advocates."

*Councillor Peter Dawson, Chairman of Education and Children's Services Committee,
LB Wandsworth*

"My Green School is a fabulous initiative which presents teachers and children with an opportunity to connect with sustainability in a creative and meaningful way."

Fiona Bailey, Senior Lecturer in Primary and Early Years Education at Middlesex University

"Open-City's Architecture in Schools programme creates unique on-the-spot forums for the exchange of ideas: architects and fresh young minds coming together to directly experience the qualities of London's built environment."

Frosso Pimenides, Director of BSc1 Architecture at UCL's Bartlett School of Architecture

"[Open-City's Art in the Open is] a resource that local authorities, developers and other art commissioners can use in order to help ensure that the quality and vitality of London's public art projects is maintained."

Cultural Metropolis: The Mayor's Cultural Strategy 2012 and Beyond

How Open-City works

Open-City works across the whole of London as an independent, non-profit organisation, inspiring everyone to demand a better-quality built environment. We engage the non-professional in design issues, educate young people and teachers in using architecture as a valuable learning tool, and enable decision-makers to advocate for good design. Here is an overview of our work year-round – in numbers:

Engage

4 exhibitions with an audience of 1500
6 publications and 1 online publication
150,000 Open House London Guide publications
53 Tours
200 DVDs / CD Roms
731 community events for 250,000 people

Enable

Trained 164 built environment professionals
Involved 27 artists
44 policy and advice sessions
4 research projects
3 competitions
Lectures, seminars and debates, conferences with approx 500 delegates attending in total

Educate

7 days of professional training
70 education events to 4000 Students
18 informal education and participatory sessions
70 pupil exploration visits to 55 buildings
3 teacher training / INSET days

Working towards a better-designed city

Jay Merrick, writer and architecture critic of The Independent, talks to Founding Director Victoria Thornton about the Open-City organisation

Jay Merrick: Open-City has rapidly established itself as a prime source of community, neighbourhood and education initiatives, including the hugely successful Open House London, which promotes well-designed urban development. How does Open-City empower communities to contribute to making a better-designed city?

Victoria Thornton: In the past, there was a strict divide between the lay person and the design and planning professionals, which largely defined, for instance, public consultation processes related to new development. Now, it appears that new government policy is seeking to change this emphasis, giving communities more say about changes to the built environment in their local area. At the heart of Open-City's ethos is the idea that the professional and non-professional have equal status and responsibility – both are equally important in the process. We see our role as showing those who are not architects or designers how to argue the local case in favour of good-quality design amongst their community. We give them the tools and language to do that – a knowledge and vocabulary that enables everyone to be better informed. Being grounded within the community, we see our role as being able to engage local people effectively in the earliest stages of the decision-making process, with the aim of supporting long-term involvement.

Better design lifts the spirits, and lasts longer. And part of Open-City's mission is to raise awareness of design quality.

Merrick: So, in essence, it's about encouraging better-informed dialogues between people, professionals, planners and developers.

Thornton: Yes. Surely it is a good thing that communities will have greater control over the way their environments are developed. But it's also important for everyone involved to understand what's not possible, at times, in terms of development or amenities and the reasons behind this.

Merrick: And do you think the importance of this way of working is recognised more widely?

Thornton: In general, no but of course there are excellent examples. More resources and money are needed to show how communities can help themselves through better designed environments. What we're saying is that, actually, you do need to have better devolved decisions. In other words, there has to be a more local sense of responsibility and involvement in understanding the complex design process. How can communities think through potential changes to their environments if they don't have access to learning how to do so? That is where Open-City can fit in.

Merrick: How can Open-City achieve this effectively?

Thornton: We support communities in developing an understanding that they can make a valuable contribution by learning much more about planning and urban design issues. We talk about action-learning, by which we mean that you are learning on site, on the spot, in your neighbourhoods – not in an abstract way. By showcasing the best architecture in London, initiatives like Open House London can help people to understand their surroundings in more detail and to reflect on their actual experience of it – as people living and working and moving in three-dimensional space. By focusing on quality, it can lead them to ask:

‘What changes might help tip the balance into creating a better environment?’ It’s about being informed enough to question what you’ve taken for granted, locally.

Merrick: And what’s on Open-City’s menu of activities?

Thornton: We are looking at local urban design in different ways for different audiences. Initiatives such as Open House London can begin to take people on that journey to understanding places and their possibilities. On another level, our advocacy and enabling initiatives build design awareness among Borough planners and councillors who make decisions about urban development. And our education programmes, such as Architecture in Schools, inspire young people to explore the architecture of our city, supporting learning in and out of the classroom.

Merrick: But will you go into a neighbourhood and say: ‘We’d like to meet 20 householders, and take you around your neighbourhood and suggest things that may be significant when thinking about urban development?’

Thornton: Well for instance, there are Neighbourhood Forums being set up. We see our expertise being valuable, enabling people to step back and understand in an informed way how the built environment works.

Open-City supports communities in developing an understanding that they can make a valuable contribution to urban design and planning.

Merrick: Which aspects of architecture, or place, or public realm would you ideally like to highlight?

Thornton: Believing strongly in the effects of design quality. Demanding that higher quality buildings and public spaces are created, using the best possible materials and architects. Ensuring that neighbourhoods achieve long-term changes, not quick-fixes. What’s the point of creating a much-needed safe play area or community centre, for example, if the materials and equipment are second rate and won’t last? All that does is create a depressing blot on the urban landscape. Better design lifts the spirits, and lasts longer. And part of Open-City’s mission is to raise awareness of design quality.

Merrick: Ultimately, then, a well-designed city cannot work properly unless it’s based on responsibilities understood and shared by councils, planners, developers, and ratepayers?

Thornton: Exactly. Each of these groups has particular skills and aspirations. But they are not necessarily congruent! So there must be mutual recognition of the different roles being played. It’s about everyone being counted in, even though each group might talk in a different way about places and how they might change.

Merrick: So we’ve come full circle, back to the quality of the dialogue that needs to happen everywhere to make the built environment work at a local level?

Thornton: Indeed. It’s crucial that people have access to developing the tools and language to articulate what they want from their local area. This means that all parties are in a position to get the best out of a given development. Open-City is certain that this must be at the heart of really meaningful participation.

Merrick: How long will it take for Open-City’s contribution to design quality and urban environments to become embedded in the processes underlying new developments?

Thornton: Everybody has been jaundiced by consultation in the past – that feeling that being consulted won’t make any difference. Now, there’s a golden opportunity for councils, developers and architects to be motivated in new ways by developing constructive, long-term relationships with local communities that focus on the importance of design quality. Open-City can be at the heart of this motivation.

Open-City’s initiatives can begin to take people on the journey to understanding places and their possibilities.

Celebrate 20 Years

Open House London 2012 will be a landmark year, as next year we will be celebrating the 20th birthday of the Open-City organisation and the Annual Event itself. We will be marking this anniversary through a rich and varied programme of activity across all of our work – including a commemorative book, to be published by Ebury Press, out in August 2012 – with the overall theme of ‘The Changing Face of London’.

As the world comes to London in 2012, we will also be highlighting how Open House is a simple yet powerful concept replicated successfully around the globe in cities including New York, Dublin, Tel Aviv, Melbourne, Barcelona, Chicago, Rome and Helsinki.

Our loyal fans will have watched us grow from the small acorn of an idea when we started in 1992. We want you to help us celebrate...

... and so for the capital's greatest architectural showcase

Open House
London

London – a liveable city

Good design plays a crucial role in creating a vibrant and ‘liveable’ city – a place with pleasant environments where people want to live and work. Open House London is the annual opportunity to discover this at first hand, all over London. Find out more about issues that are relevant to your local area – from the design of homes, the impact of climate change, good infrastructure and the role of architects and designers in revitalising places and landscapes. There are over 750 buildings, neighbourhood walks, architects’ talks, boat tours and more to choose from in the main directory, from major landmarks such as BT Tower, to small private homes and everything in between. Here are just a few highlights of things to see and do...

Liveable neighbourhoods

Open House is unique in that you see, hear and talk about great architecture and design at first hand. Whether it’s a renewed look at your own neighbourhood or exploration of a new area, our open buildings and expert-led tours will affect how you feel about your city and the way we live. Have a look at the Barking Central (p16), Woolwich (p33), and Dalston Regeneration walks to see how whole quarters are being transformed. Other events such as the Children’s City, a Meanwhile London project (p51), want to encourage communities to consider their corner of London a more liveable place. Look in the main listings for the purple dots and neighbourhood walks and tours sections for the whole range of ‘Liveable City’ events.

Living on the water

London’s waterways and rivers are crucial to its infrastructure but also increasingly a focus for leisure and even living. Boat tours unveil the engineering legacy and future transformations of and around the Thames (Blackfriars p28, Royal Victoria Dock p51, East London p33 and Central London river tours p47), whilst our programme on the Lea Valley starts to bring a new emphasis to London’s second river, the Lea (p10).

Regenerated public space enhanced with art is at City Road Basin’s ‘HABITAT’ project (p43). Water-based communities show how they live at Kingsland Basin Moorings (p34) and Hermitage Community Moorings, Wapping (p59). HCM is a vibrant community of 19 historic boats and a floating education centre.

Design for living

With over 60 private homes of all kinds showcased, Open House is your opportunity to get an insiders’ view of great domestic design and tips from the experts – whether they are contemporary award-winners, vintage 60s designs, or eco retro-fitted and revitalised older stock. There’s also lots of interesting housing from historic through post-war social housing to new current mixed-use/mixed-tenure solutions. Good examples and comparisons can be found at Alexandra Road (p21) and at Phoenix Heights where the architect and RIBA President Incumbent Angela Brady is leading tours (p59), or the award-winning scheme at Claredale Street (p59).

The Homes and Communities Agency, Notting Hill Housing Trust and Trees for Cities are showcasing twinned public housing schemes, the fabrik homes and Coldharbour Lane twinned sites (p46) in Lambeth, one historic and one contemporary, to highlight the parallels and differences in the conception of ideal homes over the last 160 years. The project shows how design quality – including concern with space standards, the use of technology and making housing suitable for inhabitants’ lifestyles – resonates over time.

Changes are happening all over the city with regeneration on every scale, and with these changes having such an impact on places it's a high priority for communities to find out more about what's happening. East London in particular is undergoing massive change with the London 2012 Olympics driving change. This year is the final opportunity to see the site under construction – and for one year only their tours are taking place 1 week in advance, officially launching our festival! Full details:

London 2012 Olympic Park

Meet: The Score Complex, Oliver Road, Leyton E10 5JY

Sat/Sun 10 & 11 September. Access via regular tours departing from Score. Maximum of 6 people per group booking. A minimum age of 8 years will apply. Pre-book ONLY from 15 August – on 0300 2012 550. New audio tour showing the Olympic Park located at www.london2012.com/audiotour.d RT

In 2012, the eyes of the world will be on a 2,5sq km area of east London – the Olympic Park and the heart of the London 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games. On 10 & 11 September the Park will make its fifth appearance in London's Open House, a week earlier than the rest of the attractions across London. The 'big build' will have been completed on one of the largest construction projects in Europe, transforming the skyline of east London forever. Visitors will get first hand experience of the Park with a bus tour taking in the sights of all the main Park venues for the Games – the Olympic Stadium, Aquatics Centre, Velodrome, Athletes' Village, Handball Arena and the temporary Basketball Arena. DLR/Tube/Rail: Leyton

Nearby, changes are happening in Ilford. Pioneer Point (p52) will become the east of London's architectural icon. Two dramatic residential towers of 35 and 25 stories with spectacular views to the City, Canary Wharf and the London 2012 Olympic Stadium, it is the newest addition to the London skyline just 14 minutes from the City. Carefully and beautifully specified and with sustainability in mind, Open House London will be the first opportunity to see the towers both completed and partially under construction.

Also check our London Boroughs section of the site, openhouselondon.org.uk/boroughs, for an insight into projects in planning and in progress, and an overview of each area.

London's infrastructure past, present, future

This year we've a special showcase of the vital role of civil engineers in building, maintaining and transforming the capital's infrastructure and built environment, in partnership with The Institution of Civil Engineers (ICE).

ICE is organising a series of walks, tours and boat trips to celebrate and explore innovative engineering of the past, present and future, including visits to ICE London Civil Engineering Award winning projects.

Highlights include insights into: water and sewage at Abbey Mills Pumping Station (p51), Crossness Engines House (p18), Thames Barrier and flood risk (p33) and King George V Pumping Station (p31); transport transformations at Blackfriars (by boat, p28), East London Line (p35) and London Bridge (p56); energy at Closed Loop Recycling (p16) and SELCHP (p48); the legacy and future of engineering up and down the Thames on special boat tours (p33 & 47), and in the lower Lea Valley – see events below. ICE Award Winners such as the Velodrome at the London 2012 Olympic Site (p9) or the National Tennis Centre Sports Canopy (p62) are flagged with their logo against the listings, and the whole range of sites to visit are marked with an orange dot. Hear from engineers at many of the sites – look for the E against listings.

Revealing the Lea Valley

Until the 2012 Olympics were awarded to London, few people in the east of the city, let alone in the region, were aware of the Lea Valley. Next summer will show Londoners and visitors to the capital what has been achieved with £9bn of public investment in the area between Hackney Wick and Stratford. But the Lea Valley is much more than the Olympic Park.

Several expert-led walks and talks will showcase the regeneration and investment into emerging communities on the valley's edge, the valley's wildlife, the history of enterprise and invention, the engineering that keeps the capital going, and the spectacular leisure landscapes. Find out about the lower Lea Valley's industrial legacy amidst wild landscapes on the Walthamstow Wetlands (p61) and ICE (p51) walks, or for more of an overview join the cycle tour along the towpaths (p37).

Talk: walking in the Metropolitan Wild – the River Lea

Thursday 15 September, 6.30 - 8.30pm

Margaret Howell, 34 Wigmore Street, W1U 2RS

Refreshments from 6:30, talk at 7:15.

The Lea Valley is a mix of ancient marshland, metropolitan infrastructure and changing industrial landscapes. William Mann (Wetherford Watson Mann Architects) and Ralph Ward (Department for Communities and Local Government) talk about the area's character and potential to evolve as a public landscape. 5-16 September: Wigmore Street will exhibit photographs by Phillip Ebeling and Jason Orton, together with maps by Wetherford Watson Mann.

Tickets are free but booking is required, go to openhouselondon.org.uk/spotlight.

London Landscape

This year's Open House features nearly fifty projects with landscape at their heart. (Look out for ● in the listing.) From Alexandra Palace to the National Maritime Museum in Greenwich, investment in landscape is changing the face of the capital. Walk through the Liveable City of London, view the regeneration of Woolwich, discover Dalston's Eastern Curve and follow the Exhibition Road as it is turned into one of London's most spectacular new places.

The map features landscape projects which are or will soon change the face of London. Major green improvements in Lewisham, the London 2012 Olympic Park the largest new park in a century, High Street 2012 – the great new route through the East End. All are contributing to a range of social, environmental, and economic benefits for the capital.

The Landscape Institute is the professional body for landscape architects. The LI's mission is to build the professional community of landscape architects in the service of the public interest. Its vision is to create a thriving society and environment through inspirational places. For more details on landscapes in London www.landscapeinstitute.org/openhouse.

Green Sky Thinking

Nearly half of the UK's energy consumption comes from the ways in which buildings are lit, heated and used. Creating sustainable solutions both for new build and retrofit are therefore among the most urgent issues for built environment professionals today. Have a look at 39 Parkholme Road (p34), CityWest Homes Retrofit for the Future (p63) and Zero Carbon Loft (p30) or for new builds Mayville Community Centre (p43). Also look out for the green dot against listings for Green Exemplars or the G for green features.

openhouselondon.org.uk/green

After having explored some of the latest solutions in green design and retrofit over the weekend, find out more through a new strand of our Green Sky Thinking initiative. From 19 to 22 Sept a packed and varied programme of talks, seminars, displays, roundtable discussions, installations and other activities – mostly taking place in practitioners' own studios and offices – gives you direct access to experts and some of their most innovative ideas in green building happening in the UK. For full details visit www.open-city.org.uk/sustainability

Walking or cycling between buildings on Open House weekend is the perfect way to stay healthy, see some great architecture and help to make a greener, cleaner, well-designed city. Check out our cycling tours – architect Benedict O'Looney will bike about Peckham (p57), or join the Lea Valley cycle tour (p37). Keep checking the website for additional bike tours. Also check out the many neighbourhood walks listed at the end of each borough section. Cyclists can join our architecture on your bike group on facebook (architectureonyourbike) to share bike-friendly routes between Open House buildings.

Competitions and other cool stuff

Archi-bus tour

This year, we are once again working with Arriva London to bring you a bus tour with a difference. Win a place on an architectural whirlwind tour by historic Routemaster bus (itself an amazing piece of architectural design), kicking off with an exclusive tour of BT Tower, and taking in other Open House buildings, with commentary by Royal College of Art tutor and bus driver Joe Kerr! Places are limited so to be in with a chance to win a place on this half day tour on Sunday afternoon, answer this: How many buses can be parked in the new eco-friendly Stagecoach London West Ham Bus Garage?

Answers to bustour@open-city.org.uk by Fri 2 Sept by 6pm. Winners will be notified.
www.theheritagefleet.com

Win a weekend stay 5* Town Hall Hotel

Friday 16 – Sunday 18 September

Competition to enjoy a weekend stay for two over Open House Weekend at the beautiful award winning Town Hall Hotel in London's East End. A welcome cocktail will be served on arrival, before guests enjoy a full weekend exploring Open House London.

To enter, answer this question: Which two predominant styles of architecture feature at the Grade II listed Town Hall Hotel?

Answers to competition@open-city.org.uk by 6pm Thursday 1 September.

The winner will be the first correct answer drawn at random and will be informed by Friday 2 September. The Town Hall Hotel will also be giving Open House tours during the event, see p60.

Photography competition

Open House is an opportunity to capture a building or view in our photography competition, sponsored by The Architects' Journal, and win some fantastic prizes provided by Lomography. The main category, "The Changing Face of London", responds to the theme of our 2012 anniversary year. By entering the competition, you could be in with a chance to have your photos published as part of our celebrations. A special theme and category is "Architectural Details". Entries will be judged by an expert panel AJ Art Editor Brad Yendle and architectural photographers Grant Smith and Ed Reeve.

openhouselondon.org.uk/competition has full details of all our competitions' criteria, terms and how to enter.

Your chance to meet the experts

Look out for the entries marked with a code A and E throughout this guide; it means that architects or engineers will be giving talks and tours of some of the buildings they've helped design. Practice Directors feature at some of the sites such as Lauriston Primary School (p34), Clapham Manor Primary School (p46) and EDF Energy London Eye (p46) and these are indicated in the listings, plus council officers at Taberner House (p29) and even councillors getting involved at Lambeth Town Hall! There are a staggering 1600 tours being given by architects of their buildings this year in total. Also, some of their studios/offices will be open, so that you can see and discuss with them the projects that they're working on.

See architectural images, drawings and data in the AJ Buildings Library – look out for red dots in the listings and find out more at the online library ajbuildingslibrary.co.uk – free to OpenHousers until the 8th September.

Open House Junior

What's happening for children and families? All sorts of events are taking place throughout the weekend. See the listings coded 'J' for details of interesting creative activities for children such as the drawing and model making at Children's City (p51), The Mobile Architectural Laboratory (p19 - includes ice-cream eating!), Kilburn Grange Park Adventure Playground (p23). At Uphall Primary School (p52) and Berger School (p34), children are even leading the activities and tours. See full list online at openhouselondon.org.uk/junior

What info can I find in this programme?

You can find listings for each building and event with address, opening days and hours, access to visitors, pre-booking details where relevant, amenities and transport, with bus numbers listed at the end. See key listing right. All main areas are open to the public unless otherwise stated. Also note the colour-coded arrows indicating opening days! Blue means open Saturday only, pink means Sunday only, double purple means both days! See key opposite page right.

How do I find out more about the buildings and how to get around? See openhouselondon.org.uk

The website is your other resource for your activity planning. It builds on the information you see in this programme. It has the most up to date listings including listings of all churches. You can search for period of architecture, type of building, name of architect or geographical location. You can see where buildings are located and plan your route between them, using the handy map-based interface. All this to help you 'learn' more. There are images and factsheets for most entries. The website also gives you further information on many of our other programmes, and allows you to order further copies of this programme and other related publications.

What will I find when I get to the buildings?

At many of the 700 sites, there will be someone to show you around and answer your questions. These are the Open House guides and stewards, and there are thousands of them – some professional, some amateur enthusiast, all volunteering their time and knowledge. In recognition of their role their badge enables them to gain priority access to buildings apart from those that are pre-booking only. For information about volunteering in 2011, please email volunteers@open-city.org.uk.

Stop Press

Please do try to check this! From 14 September amendments, additions and withdrawals to the list of participating buildings will be available by visiting the Open House website. Online listings will be kept up to date throughout.

Disclaimer: Neither Open-City nor the leader or organiser of any event, activity or walk advertised here or on the Open-City website nor any other programme listing, print or electronic, shall be held liable for the death or injury, accident or damage to the person or property (including theft or loss) of any event participant or any guest or any person occurring during or arising from participation in any of the events advertised in the Open House London events programme.

Do I need to book?

90% of buildings are on a first come basis, however a few of the properties will require you to book in advance. Where this is through the building contact details are given. Bookings administered by Open House are indicated. For bookings through Open House visit openhouselondon.org.uk/bookings for details of how to make your booking through our web listings and how to release bookings. Spaces are limited and are on a strictly first come, first served basis. Open House regrets that we cannot guarantee availability of places. As places on these tours are restricted please ensure that you attend. Open House is unable to take bookings by phone. NOTE: pre-booking is only open from 10am 9 August – 15 September unless otherwise stated.

VocalEyes Audio Described Tours

This year blind and partially sighted people will again have the rare opportunity to go on VocalEyes audio described tours of four of London's iconic buildings. Each tour will be led by one of their describers with a representative from the building or the building's designers.

To find out more about the audio described tours and to book your place please visit the VocalEyes website www.vocaleyeyes.co.uk or Contact VocalEyes at enquiries@vocaleyeyes.co.uk or call 020 7375 1043

VocalEyes is a national charity providing access to the arts through audio description and the audio described architecture tours for Open House Weekend 2011 have been kindly supported by Greater London Fund for the Blind and the Drapens Charitable Fund.

What are the terms of entry?

Open House London is a free event in which all sections of the community are invited to participate. Please note that each building's opening, security arrangements and refusal of entry are controlled by individual owners, and entry to each building is on terms and at times specified, over 17 & 18 September 2011. Participation in events and activities is at your own risk. Information in this guide is provided by contributors. Open-City has taken all reasonable care to verify the information provided and cannot accept responsibility for any variation from the details published here. Please do respect building owners and their privacy, and be mindful of photo-taking.

Walthamstow Wetlands, Walthamstow Reservoirs

➔ Meet: Sat 10am outside Ferry Boat Inn, Ferry Lane N17 9NG Duration 2 hours. T

Walthamstow Reservoirs form an extraordinary waterscape of approx 178 ha - the largest single man-made body of water in London. They tell the story of Victorian engineering and the industrial heritage of the Lee Valley and its role in the supply of water for the growing Capital. A largely hidden landscape, the site has evolved into a distinctive wild space in the heart of London's East End. Several historic buildings and structures in the landscape include the Grade II listed Coppermill and Old Marine Engine House.

London's Infrastructure Past, Present, Future

The Institution of Civil Engineers (ICE) is proud to partner with Open House London and showcase the vital role of civil engineers in building, maintaining and transforming the capital's infrastructure and built environment.

ICE is organising a series of walks, tours and boat trips to celebrate and explore innovative engineering of the past, present and future, including visits to ICE London Civil Engineering Award winning projects. Highlights include:

Past

London's rich heritage

- Boat Tour 1 - London's engineering heritage
- London Bridge Station
- Abbey Mills Pumping Station (technical drawing pictured)

Present

World-class capital

- East London Line
- Closed Loop Recycling's Dagenham Plant
- SELCHP Energy Recovery Facility
- EDF Energy London Eye (pictured)

Future

Building a city for tomorrow

- Boat Tour 2 - Engineering East London
- Crossrail - Canary Wharf site visit
- Blackfriars boat and barge tours
