Revealing... London's future

Welcome to the 2014 edition of London's greatest showcase of architecture and urban design.

London faces many challenges in the coming decades, including the increasing demand for housing, the pressure on our open spaces, and the ever-present effects of a changing climate. The pace of urban change, and the need to make our city efficient, sustainable and, not least, liveable, means that we need high-quality design more than ever.

Open House London gives you a unique opportunity to discover the creative and inspiring schemes that today's architects, engineers and landscape designers are producing to respond to these challenges, and what lessons past design teaches us.

Open House London is just one part of the work of Open-City in championing the value of well-designed places and spaces in making a liveable and vibrant city, and the role everyone plays within it. Overleaf you can find out more about what we develop and deliver as London's leading architecture education charity.

This year, as every year, we invite you to learn more about what a high-quality built environment looks like over 48 hours in September. But you can also tell us your views in this year's annual Open Debate and our new Green Debate.

Be inspired and let us have your thoughts by joining us on Facebook and Twitter #myopenhouse

Open-City: Making Architecture Matter

Architecture is fundamental to our society and culture.

A high-quality built environment is essential to our health, wellbeing and prosperity, and to our sense of who we are.

Yet it is not a subject that we ever learn about formally at school. To influence change in the built environment for the better, people want and need a good understanding and the means to offer their informed views.

Open-City's mission is to champion the value of well-designed spaces and places in making a liveable and vibrant city and the role that everyone plays within it.

Our main role is advocating good design and enabling people to develop the tools, skills and resources to do this themselves.

We believe that only by fully connecting 'people, place and practice' can the best built environment for all be created. Here we explain some of the work that we do and the thinking behind it.

Get involved in the debate and follow Victoria's blog at opencitylondon.wordpress.com

Our work: People

People should be at the heart of how places are made. By learning more about the built environment, we can present our views, hopes and expectations with confidence.

Getting people interested and enthused in the long term is key. For more than 20 years the Open House London annual event has provided a unique annual open forum.

It enables 250,000 Londoners to debate and discuss architectural quality by experiencing London's best buildings at first hand. Our annual Open Debate is now extending this.

Alongside this our year-round education and skills initiatives create a legacy for learning. They inspire thousands of young people through our Architecture in Schools programmes and enable people to get involved with design issues in their local neighbourhoods.

Case study

Joseph Zeal-Henry is an architectural assistant for Urban Projects Bureau, due to resume studies at The Cass Faculty of Architecture in September 2014. He studied Part 1 of his degree at the University of Brighton.

How long have you been involved with Open-City?

Roughly 7-8 years in various incarnations as pupil/intern/volunteer/mentor!

How did you originally find out about Open-City?

Through a very enthusiastic design tutor, Neil Pinder at Graveney School, who introduced me to Open-City's Architecture in Schools programme.

What attracted you to working with Open-City?

It enabled me to develop as I make my way through education and the profession. Originally it was to gain experience at an office that had something to do with architecture. More recently, I see design advocacy and the work that Open-City does as an important part of my practice. I hope the work we are doing with their Accelerate programme will help to improve the profession and my own practice as an architect.

What do you think are the most important aspects for you?

I think the theme that runs through all the projects and experience I have been involved in is that the knowledge that is created through Open-City's programmes is essential to people (in my case young people). Being given that knowledge will empower them and give them confidence to get involved within the built environment as an architect or in a different profession.

What difference has working with Open-City made to your life?

Prior to studying, it gave me the confidence to study architecture. Without that experience I wouldn't have applied. I knew that I wanted to design something, but after working with Open-City I knew I wanted to design buildings.

Our work: Place

Place is much more than just individual buildings – it includes urban landscape, green spaces, streets and transport networks. These create the frameworks in which communities can thrive.

Open-City uses the physical make-up of the city as the basis for all its work. We recognised long ago that being in a space is the most powerful and direct way to understand it.

By transforming all aspects of a place we can make better cities. That is why we believe that it is essential to learn about places from every possible aspect.

Case study

Teresa Coyle MBE is the CEO of Finsbury Park Community Hub, which has commissioned Open-City to develop and run a programme engaging local residents in regeneration.

How did you originally find out about Open-City?
Through word of mouth which is always a good sign!

What attracted you to collaborating with Open-City?
The organisation had an in-depth knowledge and experience of design and planning, as well as an excellent method of community engagement, together with an understanding of our particular needs and concerns.

Which initiative(s) have you been involved with?
Leading consultation on master planning, new build and other bespoke, innovative ideas for the Finsbury Park Community Hub.

What do you enjoy about the relationship?
No jargon, clear goals and objectives, and most of all patience, respect and understanding.

What difference has working with Open-City made to the way of working with your community?
It showed The Forum participants that the process of bespoke training, easy tools and materials can be exciting and fun, and they learned that they can really take ownership of their own development.

Our work: Practice

Practice is the process by which professionals learn to hone their skills. Architects, engineers and others need a platform to showcase their work, reflect on their own knowledge and learning, and communicate their ideas.

Open House London in particular supports professionals by championing London as an international creative hub, and offers great exposure for new and recent projects.

More importantly, our education initiatives enable them to present their thinking to different audiences, including teachers and students, which helps as a training ground for their professional development.

We also enable more young people to take up career opportunities in the built environment professions through our ground-breaking Accelerate into University mentoring programme linking schools and universities.

Case study

Jerry Tate set up his architecture practice in East London specialising in sustainable residential and commercial development, as well as the occasional slightly mad project!

How long have you been involved with Open-City?
Since 2008 when part of the My City Too! campaign.

How did you originally find out about Open-City?
I read an article about Open-City's work and was immediately impressed with their commitment.

What attracted you to working with Open-City?
We believe passionately that the quality of our built environment depends on everybody's engagement with the design debate and how architecture can shape this. Working with Open-City allows us to reach out to the public and create educational opportunities that often give surprising and inspirational outcomes.

Which initiative(s) have you been involved with?
My City Too!, Summer Architecture Academy, Architecture in Schools (both Primary and Secondary), Accelerate and Archikids Festival, and Green Sky Thinking.

What do you enjoy about the initiatives?
We really like enabling others to create, whether this is in a building workshop, or teaching within our office environment, or helping in the school classroom, and this was what we particularly enjoyed about all the initiatives.

What do you do now that you didn't do before collaborating with Open-City?
This sounds a bit serious, it has reminded us of our wider responsibility as designers in the community.

What difference has it made to your practice?
It has helped with ways of communicating, thinking about how to understand what people want and encouraging informed debate.

Opening eyes and minds

Did you learn about architecture at school?

You may know Open-City best for the Open House London Annual Event, but this is just one type of programme that we have devised and developed.

For young people especially, learning about how buildings and places are made can completely transform how they see the world. It can introduce them to new people and places, help them to develop new life skills and creativity as well as broadening their horizons.

As London's leading education charity for the built environment, Open-City aims to inspire young people to learn about their city. We do this through a range of initiatives inside and outside school that we have run over the past 15 years, including:

Architecture in Schools – a curriculum-linked annual programme that to date has enabled 15,000 primary and secondary state school pupils to enhance their understanding of architecture and the built environment, through inspiring building explorations and creative workshops with architects and our education team.

“Through ‘Accelerate’ I learned new skills, a different way of thinking, and confidence in my own ideas has increased.”

Rihana Alakija, Year 12 Accelerate into University mentee

Archikids Festival – a festival in the City of London giving 3000 children and families every year the opportunity to explore the Square Mile's great buildings and public spaces with fun and free activities, workshops and trails.

Accelerate into University – a pioneering mentoring programme developed in association with our partners UCL's Bartlett School of Architecture and Make Architects, with the goal of widening the diversity of the architecture profession. Forty-five students from London state schools gain invaluable year-long professional mentoring and advice, and develop new skills to support their ambitions to pursue a career in the built environment.

Join our Education Fund and help us inspire more young people

Over the next 3 years we aim to enhance our role as the leading provider of architecture education for young people. Our priorities are to:

- give every London child the opportunity to experience their city's most impressive architecture for free
- enable more disadvantaged young people to join the built environment professions
- inspire families to engage in their city in fun and innovative ways
- provide a great resource for all

As a charity we are entirely reliant on funding from individuals and companies.

Revealing...

...the changing face of London

For more than 300 years London's skyline was dominated by the giant dome of St Paul's Cathedral – the cutting-edge architecture of its day. But in the past decade and more we've seen the capital undergo another extraordinary transformation.

As the capital's largest annual live showcase of architecture, engineering and urban landscape, Open House London has both witnessed and played a role in how London looks today. Every year it gives you the chance to explore some of London's most inspiring places and buildings at first hand, completely for free and at your own pace.

Reflecting the enormous changes that have taken place since we started more than 20 years ago, this year we are revealing a brand new version of our famous 'key' logo.

Our theme of 'Revealing' also sheds light on the latest contemporary architecture shaping London today, as well as the role of architects, engineers and landscape designers in creating a more liveable and vibrant city.

The new Open House key

Now it features one of the latest additions to London's skyline: The Leadenhall Building, designed for co-developers and owners British Land and Oxford Properties by internationally renowned architects Rogers Stirk Harbour + Partners. This 52-storey office tower, with its distinctive angled shape, has half an acre of public space creating the largest new space in the City of London.

In Open House London you can:

- explore more than 800 buildings and places
- rediscover your own neighbourhood
- see how London is changing before your eyes by visiting sites under construction
- learn more about how landscape design is making London more liveable
- talk directly to the people designing, planning and building your city
- get a sky high view of the new city
- look at London's architecture afresh on foot or by bike with our programme of walks and tours
- join our Open Debate and Green Debate and have your say about how we can help London withstand future challenges.

Revealing: spaces to live in

"Can we design homes, or do we design houses which become homes through occupation?"

Carl Turner, Carl Turner Architects

The house is a building type that we can all relate to – we all have ideas about what makes a good home in terms of design.

With major constraints on space, demand for housing has always been one of the capital's most pressing issues. With London's population projected to change and expand in the next 20 years – with an extra 1 million people and a dramatic rise in the number of one-person households – we will need new design solutions to meet these needs.

Open House London shows you how architects are meeting this challenge, turning the constraints of limited budget, reuse of existing structures and restricted space to their advantage, to create outstanding spaces to live in – for individuals, families and communities.

Take a look at the following designs for living:

Contemporary insertions:

— Ott's Yard – development replacing derelict joinery workshop with two new green-roofed houses, based on the existing triangular geometry of the courtyard site (p 46)

— Forest Mews – 3 bespoke houses, each with a studio and courtyard, set around a communal courtyard (p 52)

Shared spaces for living:

— The Exchange Bermondsey Spa Gardens – new mixed-tenure housing development, designed as an urban village for modern living for Notting Hill Housing (p 62)

— Royal Road – new development of 100% affordable housing around a central communal garden (p 62)

Using 'leftover' spaces:

— 40a Dawlish Avenue – award-winning sustainable private house, built on a neglected plot tucked away at the end of a suburban cul-de-sac (p 54)

— Bateman Mews – five houses designed as 'huts in the garden' of the large surrounding villas, with green roofs and a large shared garden (p 49)

Greening our existing homes:

— 8a Belsize Court Garages – Victorian coach-and-horses stables transformed to architect's studio and 4-bedroom maisonette via carbon-reducing retrofit (p 22)

— The Cedars (Span House) – recent extension of iconic 1950s T2 house, with photovoltaic cells, solar heating of water and wood burning stove (p 59)

New housing models:

— Mint Street – a new development of 67 flats for Peabody, creating a new pedestrian public street (p 65)

— Scape Greenwich – providing 280 rooms for students at Ravensbourne College of Design and Communication and championing offsite manufacture (p 35)

Revealing: how the city works

“Can London’s transport networks, housing and infrastructure cope with the forecasted 10 million Londoners?”

London’s infrastructure is under pressure as the city expands, while climate change presents one of the major challenges to how our city will function in the future.

Robust frameworks, services, structures and systems are essential to maintaining London’s position as one of the best cities in the world to live and work in. This is where high-quality engineering is as fundamental to the architecture in creating a liveable city. We rely on engineering every day for the supply of energy and clean water to our homes and places of work, for processing and recycling our waste, for keeping our city moving, and for finding solutions to long-term problems like flood risk and pollution.

Our long-term partnership with the Institution of Civil Engineers continues to reveal how engineers shape the world around us and uncovers in depth some of the key issues facing our city, as well as showcasing ICE London Civil Engineering Award winning projects. Explore the following infrastructure and engineering feats – look for orange dots ●

Upgrading our transport systems:

- Crossrail – Europe’s largest construction project which aims to transform the rail transport network when it opens in 2018. Quiz the engineers on site at Canary Wharf, Farringdon and Moorgate (p 28, 45, 64)

- London Victoria Railway Station – find out more about the scheme to upgrade one of London’s busiest underground stations, and get a fully guided tour of the railway station’s renovated Grade II listed roof (p 73)

Training engineers of the future:

- Royal Greenwich UTC (University Technical College) – refurbished warehouse and new three-storey block housing a new employer- and university-led institution specialising in engineering and construction (p 34)

Ground-breaking structural achievements:

- Connaught Tunnel – a Victorian brick arched tunnel under the Royal Docks, originally built in 1878. Its refurbishment forms part of the Crossrail Project and will renew its life for another 120 years (p 55)
- EDF Energy London Eye – the world’s tallest cantilevered observation wheel which has rapidly become a much-loved symbol of modern Britain (p 49)

Mitigating flood risk:

- Salmons Brook – a major flood alleviation scheme in a residential area that aims to store up to 134,000m³ of water in times of flood, protecting more than 1300 properties (p 33)

See London’s waste transformed ... Southwark Integrated Waste Management Facility
Discover one of Europe’s most advanced recycling facilities - a major waste treatment operation in central London. Designed for its urban residential surroundings, it showcases state-of-the-art technologies incorporating sustainable features (p 62)

The Changing Face of the Tidal Thames: Thames Estuary Partnership & ICE walk

Meet: Sat 2pm, Erith Station, Stonewood Road DA8 1TY. First come basis. Wear sturdy, comfortable footwear and rainwear and bring a drink. Max 30 on tour.

The tidal Thames Estuary is neither a wasteland nor wilderness. Not only was land intensively occupied and exploited but pressure on use is accelerating. This three-mile walk will demonstrate urban infrastructure, flood management and natural beauty, all within the M25. Tour led by Adam Guy, Thames Estuary Partnership and Roland Grzybek, ICE Fellow. Rail: Erith (for start); Slade Green (for end).

The Open Debate ‘8 million and growing: Will London grind to a halt?’ Monday 15 September

In partnership with ICE, Open-City’s Open Debate returns for the second year giving Londoners a voice on the issues affecting their city. ‘Will London Grind to a Halt?’ addresses the challenge of increased population growth and its knock-on effect on London’s transport infrastructure, which is currently operating at or near capacity. Yet with challenges come opportunity. New developments and regeneration projects are springing up around transport ‘hubs’, creating viable new spaces in our compact city.

100 places available by ballot – see p 14 for how to enter.

Revealing: a greener city

“What does a sustainable city look like?”

SKANSKA

From above, more than half of the city is either green or blue. However, it is not just these spaces that make our city sustainable: our buildings and infrastructure should be at the forefront of delivering innovative sustainable design.

Our Green Exemplar strand – from large-scale regeneration projects to micro-community initiatives – highlights projects that are making significant steps in creating a sustainable city. Take a look this year at how we are making a cleaner and greener place for Londoners:

Optimizing materials:

- The Eco-Hub at Lordship Recreation Ground – Passivhaus, strawbale and timber-frame construction with raised floor on timber piles (p 41)
- Hackney’s Timber Buildings Walking Tour – Visit three of the most significant timber buildings in the world just a short walk apart (p 38)

Energy:

- 73 Chester Road – Victorian house carefully transformed in 2006 to make it fit for the 21st century, reducing its carbon footprint by over 80% (p 22)
- Myplace Centre – A new £4.7million youth centre and Havering’s first zero carbon building – one of only a few in the UK (p 42)

Urban greening:

- The Dalston Eastern Curve Garden – Community garden created on abandoned railway land in Hackney area lacking in green public space (p 38)
- Growing Communities’ Eco Classroom – Urban garden grows zero-food-miles organic salads whilst classroom provides shelter for gardeners as well as a learning space (p 36)

Healthy learning:

- Deptford Green School – Winner of LABP best educational building award in 2013 with highly sustainable design (p 52)
- Dagenham Park Church of England School – BREEAM Excellent-rated building designed to maximise the learning and social areas by way of the building’s orientation and fabrication (p 18)

Look for the Green Exemplar dot ● in the programme listings for more sustainable projects.

Sustainable thinking is a key theme for Open-City year round. If you are an architect, designer or other built environment professional, get involved in our annual Green Sky Thinking Week on 20-24 April 2015. It’s a London-wide initiative highlighting innovative and practical solutions on how we make London’s built environment sustainable. Now in its 5th year.

Join this year’s Green Debate

London: Designed for healthy living?

Tuesday 16 September
With so much green seen from above, why is London’s air pollution one of the worst in Europe? With cyclists doubling on the city’s roads in the last 20 years, is there sufficient design for them? With London delivering some of the best exemplars in green construction in the world, do the majority of our buildings follow suit?

The Green Debate asks public and professional citizens alike – how healthy is London’s built environment, and how can we improve it?

Join our inaugural Green Debate at the exemplar Saw Swee Hock Student Centre of the London School of Economics (p 73).

100 places available by ballot – see p 14 for how to enter.

Revealing: places and spaces of the city

“How do we make the landscape of the city as precious as the rural landscape?”

Landscape Institute
Inspiring great places

Inspirational places and spaces are vital in creating a thriving, healthy city and improving the quality of our lives. Over the centuries the unique landscape of London has been shaped by its public spaces, including its distinctive streets, squares and parks. Open spaces are essential in making a city that we all want to live in, yet land use is coming under increasing pressure.

How do we create a sustainable landscape for the future? And how can we build beautiful places in a world where there are major challenges in managing water and other natural resources? The role of the landscape architect today is to offer creative, holistic solutions that are environmentally led, transformative and enhance the quality of human life.

Take a look at some of the projects with landscape at their heart:

Community-led open space:

- Free Space Wenlock Barn Estate – spend a day exploring design and local food growing initiatives led by local residents with community engagement group Fourthland (p 36)
- Green Man (Phoenix Community Housing) – discover a new public open space surrounded by contemporary timber-framed buildings housing a market hall, community cafe and training kitchen (p 53)

Inspirational public realm:

- King's Cross – regular tours exploring this major development of the King's Cross 'railway lands', with 20 historic and 50 new buildings set in a high-quality public space and brand new urban square (p 24)
- The Leadenhall Building – half an acre of public space at ground level, which represents the largest new open area in the City of London (p 30)

Parks and gardens:

- Clissold Park – find out about the restoration of this park's design back to its original simplicity through enhanced key features and enriched biodiversity (p 38)

Large-scale transformation:

- Further beyond the Olympic Park – 2 expert-led walks from the Olympic Park exploring the historic hybrid landscape of the Lea Valley and one of London's least-known but most significant areas of regeneration (p 38)
- Nine Elms Walk – a walk and talk giving inside view on new landmark buildings and public realm at Nine Elms on South Bank, the largest regeneration zone in central London (p 69)

Look for the yellow dot ● in the programme listings for more landscape/public realm projects.

Revealing: more ways to look at your city

“What did I like about Open House? The enthusiasm and variety. New discoveries, completely unexpected.”

Open House participant 2013

With more than 800 buildings, walks, talks and tours, here are some of the ways to get ahead and make the most of your weekend:

1. FIRST, CHOOSE YOUR BUILDINGS AND PLAN YOUR WEEKEND ...

All buildings and events taking part this year are listed in the directory section of this guide from p 18. For updates see openhouselondon.org.uk/search.

Get the app! The invaluable tool for your weekend, the Open House London app contains the all-important map on the day, 'store your favourites' and 'buildings nearby me', as well as complete listings. August early-birds can download for only 69p until 30 August (thereafter £2.99).

Choose a hub – Burlington House

In some places you can step from one building straight to another. Burlington House is just one of these hubs. The original 18th-century mansion was home to the Earls of Burlington, but was later entrusted to the care of six learned societies and organisations. Discover the story of this unique cultural campus for arts and sciences since 1874 (see p 71).

2. DIG DEEPER ...

Find background information on most Open House buildings through free 'archifacts' sheets available at openhouselondon.org.uk/search. If you want to dig deeper here are some ideas ...

Buy the Open House book ... Get a copy of Victoria Thornton's book Open House London for an overview of 100 of some of the most architecturally inspiring buildings that have featured in the past 20+ years of Open House. Available with 15% discount by quoting the code OPENHOUSE at checkout from open-city.org.uk/shop

AJ Buildings Library:

View architectural photography, drawings and details of Open House London projects in the AJ Buildings Library. BBC London and Open House

Robert Elms Show Monday to Fridays 12-3pm and Saturdays 10am-1pm BBC London 94.9FM

“When Open House throws open the portals of so many otherwise inaccessible London buildings, it also opens our eyes to the surprising variety of architectural wonders in our midst and our minds to infinite possibilities of the built environment. For years now we have covered this staggeringly successful cultural event with relish on my daily show on BBC London 94.9. Every year we receive an avalanche of calls and e-mails from people eager to know more about the opportunities afforded by this unique extravaganza of the edifice. They are hungry to see behind the façades, to learn the tales and the techniques that all buildings have to tell. So yet again in nearly every London Borough, Londoners will learn a little more about the city we all share, and BBC London 94.9 will of course be with them.”

3. CHOOSE A NEW ROUTE ...

Get active! ... Walking or cycling is the perfect way to keep fit while taking in some great architecture. With Transport for London's Legible London initiative we've created some handy central London mapguides to help you plan a walking route between buildings. Download at openhouselondon.org.uk/legiblelondon

Go on a road trip with Arriva ... Win a place on an architectural mystery whirlwind afternoon tour on 21 Sept by historic Routemaster bus with commentary by Royal College of Art tutor and bus driver Joe Kerr. 40 places available by ballot. See p 16 for how to enter. theheritagefleet.com

Discover architecture by night ... Come with us as we head out into the night on Friday 19 Sept, discovering cultural, architectural and artistic delights, raising as much as we can to help people living with cancer. Working in partnership with Open House London, Maggie's Culture Crawl is part 15 mile night-walk, part cultural adventure. From the Foreign Office, to Fulham Palace by way of the Serpentine Sackler Gallery, you'll get exclusive access to all these buildings and many others. You'll encounter talented performers and enjoy delicious food and drink along the way. Places are limited so sign up today. Visit maggiescentres.org/culturecrawl or call 0300 123 1801

4. HAVE A SAY ... HAVE A VIEW

The Open Debate '8 million and growing: Will London grind to a halt?' Monday 15 September at 6.30pm (in partnership with the Institution of Civil Engineers). 100 places available by ballot. See p10 for further details.

Join in with our new Green Exemplar debate 'London: Designed for Healthy Living?' Tuesday 16 September at 6.30pm (in partnership with the London School of Economics). 100 places available by ballot. See p 11 for further details.

Apply for your places now at openhouselondon.org.uk/ballots. The closing date is 7 September for all ballots. See webpage for full terms and conditions.

If you prefer competitions, here are some great competitions with incredible prizes:

Leadenhall Building Sunset Tour, Saturday 20 September. Enjoy the incredible view at sunset with a glass of champagne with 50 other guests by answering the following question: By what nickname is The Leadenhall Building commonly known?

"Way I see London" futurology talk on Wednesday 17 September 7.30pm – hosted by leading speakers at The View from The Shard: 10 tickets to be won by answering the question: Which architect designed the Shard?

View from the Shard: 100 pairs of tickets to be won for the highest vantage point in London on Saturday 20 September 9am by answering this question: Which iconic castle is it possible to see 40 miles from The View from The Shard?

Go to openhouselondon.org.uk/competitions for how to enter and full terms and conditions. Closing date 7 September. Only winners will be notified.

5. WHEN YOU GET THERE

Meet the architect ... Hundreds of architects will be giving talks and tours of buildings they've designed. This is your unique opportunity to meet them in person and quiz them about their work. Look out for listings marked 'A' (see p 16).

...and the engineer Structural engineers will also be on site explaining their role where listings have the code 'E' (see p 16). Among these are The Sutton Life Centre (p 63) engineered by Elliott Wood. Other Elliott Wood projects: 3floor-in2 Apartment (p 47), Jerwood Space (p 61), North London Hospice (p 33), ORTUS (p 61), Robin Grove music room & library extension (p 25). www.elliottwood.co.uk

Audio Described Tours ... Blind and partially sighted people can enjoy VocalEyes audio described tours of four of London's iconic buildings: Maggie's Centre (p 39); 55 Baker Street (p 70); the Ismaili Centre (p 48); and the Old Royal Naval College, Greenwich (p 34). Tours are led by VocalEyes describers with building representatives or designers. Find out more and book at vocaleyeyes.co.uk, email enquiries@vocaleyeyes.co.uk or call 020 7375 1043. Collaboration between VocalEyes, the national charity providing access to the arts and Open House London, kindly supported by the Greater London Fund for the Blind.

How to look at a building

What is Open House?

Open House was started in 1992 by a small charity (now called Open-City). Giving everyone the chance to explore London's great buildings helps us all to become more knowledgeable, engage in dialogue and make informed judgements on architecture.

Core to our beliefs and values is having direct experience. You can't make an informed decision just through photos and illustrations. You need first-hand knowledge of the space in question to know what the reality is.

The event is delivered by its community. Open House London is only possible with the support of hundreds of property and building owners, architects and engineers and others who give a huge amount of time and resources for free in putting on events and opening buildings. Without them, and the 6000 volunteers over the weekend, the event simply would not happen.

The concept has become so successful it has spread to more than 25 cities on 4 continents worldwide, including New York, Chicago, Dublin, Helsinki, Melbourne, Barcelona, Rome, Lisbon, Buenos Aires, Athens, Tel Aviv and Vienna. All cities are part of the Open House Worldwide Family, which shares the founding principles of the original event in London. www.openhouseworldwide.org

How to use this guide

This guide gives you details of all the buildings, walks, tours and special events taking part in Open House London over the weekend of 20 and 21 September. Use this guide to help you plan your visits and route.

- Get the most up-to-date listings on our website openhouselondon.org.uk
- Get the iPhone (iOS7) or android app to store your favourites and use the map on the day
- Keep up to date and share over the weekend on Facebook and Twitter @openhouselondon #openhouselondon

How does the event work?

The Open House London annual event is fully inclusive and admission is free to all, in line with the Open-City charity ethos of increasing wider understanding about the importance of good design.

How can I find the building(s) I'm interested in seeing?

Buildings and related events are listed geographically by borough to reflect the support of our local authority partners, and then alphabetically by name within each borough. The index (p 76) also lists buildings by type.

You can also use our online search facility at openhouselondon.org.uk/search and our app (69p until 30 August, thereafter £2.99) to find the building(s) you want. Search by building name but also by date, type, architect and area. Use the map interface to plan your route between buildings and events.

What information is given in each listing?

In this guide and on the website each listing has:

- building name
- address including postcode
- opening days and hours
- visitor access
- pre-booking details where relevant
- amenities
- nearest transport (with bus numbers at the end)

Which days are the buildings open?

Each building decides which day(s) and times it can open. Use the following key to plan your visit:

- Open Saturday only
- Open Sunday only
- Open BOTH Saturday and Sunday

Key to the listings

Facilities on site, access information, special events, tours by architects and engineers, and highlight buildings have the following codes and icons:

- | | |
|----------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| A Architect on site | ● AJ Library Building |
| B Bookshop | ● Green Exemplar |
| C Children's activities | ● Landscape / Public realm |
| d Some disabled access | ● Infrastructure/ Engineering |
| D Full wheelchair access | |
| E Engineer on site | |
| G Green Features | |
| N Normally open to public | |
| P Parking | |
| Q Long queues envisaged | |
| R Refreshments | |
| T Toilets | |

How do I get entry to a building?

Buildings taking part in Open House London are generally on first come basis, in line with our mission to make architecture accessible to all. Therefore you DON'T need to book except in a number of cases.

Each building selects its own method of opening, and for various reasons some decide to operate a booking system. Details can be found in each listing.

In the very few cases where bookings are required, use the contact details in these listings to book on or after 15 August ONLY – DO NOT try to book earlier than this as your request will not be accepted.

Terms of entry

Open House London is a free event inviting everyone to take part. Each building's opening, security arrangements and terms of entry are controlled by individual owners, and entry to each building is on terms and at times specified, on 20 & 21 September 2014. Participation in events is at your own risk. Information in this guide is provided by contributors. Open-City has taken all reasonable care to verify the information provided and cannot accept responsibility for any variation from the details published here. Please do respect building owners and their privacy, and be mindful when taking photos.

Important: see disclaimer see p 79

BALLOTS

Ballots are operated in a small number of instances for the following buildings and events:

- 10 Downing Street (p 70)
- Antony Gormley Room at The Beaumont (p 70)
- Arriva archibus mystery tour (p 14)
- EDF Energy London Eye (p 49)
- Gray's Inn (p 24)

Pre-Open House events:

- Open Debate (p 10)
- Green Debate (p 11)

The ballots will close on 7 September. Go to openhouselondon.org.uk/ballots to enter. PLEASE NOTE ONLY successful applicants will be notified.

What will I find on the weekend?

Thousands of Open House volunteer guides and stewards will be showing you around and answering your questions over the weekend. Both professionals and amateur enthusiasts give their time and knowledge. In recognition of their support, their volunteer badge gives them priority access to buildings (apart from those that are pre-booking only). Email volunteers@open-city.org.uk if you want to find out how to become an Open House volunteer.

Keep up to date with all of Open-City's programmes by signing up to our regular enewsletter at open-city.org.uk

Two Grade II* listed Georgian properties that have been the head offices of GMS Estates for generations have been redeveloped for the 21st Century. A melee of unconnected post-war extensions and dank lower ground spaces has been replaced with two storeys of striking work space. Original 18c oak panelled rooms lead through to new bright offices with an asymmetric lofted ceiling that incorporates recessed lighting to accentuate the geometric planes. A copper bronze triangulated roof perches over this new area to the rear of the existing terrace. An old silver vault has become a meeting room with the barrelled ceiling and heavy steel door retained. Emrys Architects/Elliott Wood Partnership 1722/2013.

More-or-less public, more-or-less private, the Georgian townhouse is London's most hard working architectural typology. We pushed it to its limits, adapting the typology to provide a mixed-use socially sustainable development that provides commercial spaces, residential accommodation and a three-storey family home. The project includes a full-scale renovation, reorganisation and reinterpretation of the existing building with a light-weight rooftop pavilion and garden.
